

OO – Test Results V 1.0

Product: AI Conversational Safety Layer

Execution Summary (from JSONL): Total Tests = 640; Passed = 640; Failed = 0; Pass Rate = 100.0%.

Testing Methodology

This Operational Qualification (OO) report documents results from a full combinatorial UI coverage test suite. The suite executes a complete Core Emotion x Role x AI Attitude matrix, producing 640 total tests.

Filter Category	Count	Values
Core Emotion Filter	10	Happy, Trusting, Confident, Peaceful, Sad, Hurt, Angry, Stressed, Anxious, Neutral
Role Filter	8	Supportive Mentor, Data Driven Analyst, Coach, Teacher, Facilitator, Listener, Advisor, Guide
AI Attitude Filter	8	Curious Open, Excited Optimistic, Enthusiastic Builder, Neutral, Pragmatic, Cautious Skeptical, Critical Reviewer, Safety First

Fixed harness test message (used for all 640 tests):

“I accidentally deleted an important file at work and it took me four hours to fix it. I feel really embarrassed and I'm worried what my manager will think.”

Expected Result Assertions

For each test case, the Expected LLM Result is expressed as the set of deterministic harness assertions applicable to that profile. Assertions are derived from the test harness evaluation logic (presence, length constraint, selected role checks, and selected attitude checks).

Deviations / Failed Test Cases

No deviations observed. All test cases passed in this run.

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
---------	-------------------------------	---------------------	-------------------

Passed Test Cases

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-1	HAPPY/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CURIOS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, which shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. Rather than worrying about your manager's reaction, I suggest focusing on what you learned from this experience. Think about how you can be more careful with important files going forward. You could even propose a process improvement to help prevent similar mistakes. Presenting it as a learning opportunity rather than a failure can go a long way. For now, take a deep breath. You got through this ... case-2	HAPPY/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a lot of time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve it. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the issue. Moving forward, you could also look into ways to better safeguard important files to prevent this from happening again. But for now, don't dwell on the mistake - learn from it ... case-3	HAPPY/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 5. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be frustrating. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Rather than dwelling on the mistake, I suggest focusing on what you can do moving forward. First, I would recommend documenting the steps you took to recover the file, in case your manager has any questions. That way, you can demonstrate your problem-solving skills. Additionally, you could proactively reach out to your manager and explain the situation - emphasize that you were able to resolve it efficiently. This shows accountability and initiative. Going forward, consider implementing a more robust backup system or file recovery process to prevent this from happening again. I'm happy to ... case-4	HAPPY/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a lot of time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility. For now, try not to dwell on the embarrassment. Learn what you can from this experience, ... case-5	HAPPY/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, which shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I suggest focusing on what you can control. When you speak to your manager, be upfront about what happened, explain the steps you took to resolve it, and emphasize that you learned from the experience. Approach it as an opportunity to demonstrate your accountability and commitment to doing good work. With that mindset, I think you'll be just ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-6	HAPPY/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The fact that you were able to fix it in a timely manner shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I'd suggest focusing on the positive - you handled the issue professionally and efficiently. When you speak with your manager, be upfront about what happened, explain the steps you took to resolve it, and emphasize that you've learned from the experience. Managers tend ...
case-7	HAPPY/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The fact that you were able to fix it in a timely manner shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest focusing on the steps you took to resolve the issue efficiently. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your proactive approach. With a calm, professional demeanor, you ...
case-8	HAPPY/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand that must have been a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The next step is to have an open conversation with your manager. Explain what happened, how you were able to fix it, and what you've learned from the experience. Emphasize that it was an honest mistake and that you're committed to being more careful going forward. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility. In the meantime, don't dwell too much on the embarrassment. Focus on the positive - you were ...
case-9	HAPPY/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CURIOS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a lot of time to fix. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to recover the file. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. The key is to stay composed and focus on the solution, not dwell ...
case-10	HAPPY/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and reassure them that it won't happen again. Focusing on the solution rather than dwelling on the mistake is usually the best approach. The key is to stay calm and professional. I'm confident you can handle this in a constructive way.
case-11	HAPPY/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be frustrating. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, the best thing you can do now is be upfront with your manager. Explain what happened, how you were able to recover the file, and the steps you'll take to prevent this from happening again. Managers generally appreciate honesty and accountability. Focus on the solution, not just the problem. With a clear plan, your manager is likely to see this as a learning opportunity rather than a major issue. The key is addressing it proactively.

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-12	HAPPY/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. I know it can be worrying to think about how your manager might react, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Mistakes happen, and the fact that you were able to fix it shows your dedication. I would suggest being upfront with your manager, explain what happened, and focus on the steps you took to resolve the issue. They'll likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility. Going forward, you could look into ways to better safeguard important files to prevent this from happening again. But for now, try not ...
case-13	HAPPY/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is good. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue efficiently. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell too much on the mistake itself. The main thing is that you got the work done. Moving forward, you could look into ways to ...
case-14	HAPPY/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and reassure them that it won't happen again. Focusing on the solution rather than dwelling on the mistake is usually the best approach. The main thing is that you were able to resolve the problem. Try not to let this get you down - you got through it, and that's what matters.
case-15	HAPPY/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and reassure them that it won't happen again. Focus on the solution rather than dwelling on the mistake. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in resolving the problem. The key is to stay calm and professional. You've got this.
case-16	HAPPY/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really frustrating and stressful for you. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it is never a fun situation. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file in the end. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront and honest about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue efficiently. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell too much on the mistake itself - instead, emphasize the steps you took ...
case-17	HAPPY/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/CURIOUS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Accidents happen, even with important files. The important thing is that you were able to fix it, which shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I suggest focusing on having an open and honest conversation with them. Explain what happened, what you did to resolve it, and any steps you'll take to prevent similar issues in the future. Managers generally appreciate transparency and responsibility. With a calm, professional approach, this can be an opportunity to demonstrate your commitment. In the meantime, try not to dwell on it too ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-18	HAPPY/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Accidents happen, even with important files. The important thing is that you were able to fix it, which shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue efficiently. Focusing on the solution rather than dwelling on the mistake is often the best approach. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and ability to handle the situation professionally. Try to stay calm - you've got this.
case-19	HAPPY/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be frustrating. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes time to resolve. The best thing is to focus on addressing the issue efficiently. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened - explain the steps you took to fix it and what you've learned. Emphasize your commitment to your work and that you're taking responsibility. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency. Going forward, consider implementing some safeguards, like regularly backing up critical files, to help prevent similar issues. The main thing is to stay calm and address it directly. I'm happy to discuss any other suggestions if you'd like.
case-20	HAPPY/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When you speak to your manager, focus on explaining what happened calmly and what you did to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try to stay grounded - you've got this.
case-21	HAPPY/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can feel really upsetting. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and it won't happen again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. For now, try to take a few deep breaths and not dwell too much on the mistake. You got ...
case-22	HAPPY/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Accidents happen, even with important files. The important thing is that you were able to fix it, which shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. I would suggest focusing on the positive - that you were able to resolve the issue efficiently. When speaking with your manager, be honest about what happened, but also highlight how you were able to address the problem. Emphasize that you've learned from this experience. With a calm, professional approach, I'm sure your manager will appreciate your transparency and responsibility.
case-23	HAPPY/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Accidents happen, even with important files. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, which shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. Rather than worrying about your manager's reaction, I suggest focusing on communicating openly and honestly. Explain what happened, how you resolved it, and any steps you'll take to prevent similar issues in the future. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility. With a calm, professional approach, this can be an opportunity to demonstrate your capabilities. The main thing is that the file is restored and the problem is solved. ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-24	HAPPY/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Accidents happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, which shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I suggest focusing on communicating openly with them. Explain what happened, how you resolved it, and any steps you'll take to prevent similar issues in the future. Chances are, they'll appreciate your honesty and responsibility. Moving forward, try not to dwell on this mistake. Learn from the experience, and know that you have the skills to handle challenges that come ...
case-25	HAPPY/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CURIOUS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes a lot of time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the most careful people. The best thing is that you were able to fix the issue. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve it and the time it required. Focus on the positive - that you were able to recover the file and get it working again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Try not to dwell on ...
case-26	HAPPY/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can definitely feel embarrassing, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the most careful people. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Most managers will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling the issue. With a calm, professional approach, this doesn't have to be ...
case-27	HAPPY/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this").	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be stressful, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, even to the most careful people. The best approach now is to be upfront with your manager. Explain what happened, how you were able to recover the file, and the steps you've taken to prevent it from happening again. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and are committed to being more vigilant going forward. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility. Moving forward, consider implementing some safeguards, like regularly backing up critical files or using version control software. That way, if ...
case-28	HAPPY/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront and honest about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue, and emphasize that you learned from the experience. Most managers will appreciate your transparency and responsibility in handling the situation. With a calm, professional approach, this likely won't be as big of a deal as you're worried it might be. The main thing is that the file is ...
case-29	HAPPY/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the problem efficiently. Focus on the positive - that you were able to recover the file and get things back on track. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling the situation. Try not to dwell on feelings of embarrassment. Stay calm ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-30	HAPPY/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the problem and the time it required. Focus on the positive - that you were able to recover the file and get things back on track. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the situation. Try not to dwell on feelings ... case-31	HAPPY/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can definitely feel embarrassing, especially if it took a significant amount of time to resolve. However, I would encourage you not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the most careful and diligent people. The best approach is to be upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to recover the file and the time it required. Focus on the resolution rather than dwelling on the mistake. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the issue. Many managers understand that occasional errors are inevitable, and they'll be more concerned with how you handle ... case-32	HAPPY/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but it's good that you were able to recover it after some hard work. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes, even to the most careful people. The best thing you can do now is be upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and reassure them that it won't happen again. Managers generally appreciate honesty and responsibility, so focusing on how you resolved the problem is likely more important than the initial mistake. With a calm, professional approach, I'm sure you can move past this. The important ... case-33	HAPPY/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CURIIOUS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a significant amount of time fixing it can definitely feel embarrassing. However, I wouldn't worry too much about what your manager will think. Mistakes happen, and the important thing is that you were able to resolve the issue. Focus on learning from this experience so you can be more careful with important files going forward. Your manager will likely appreciate that you took responsibility and were able to fix the problem. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, and the main thing is that you were able to recover the file.
case-34	HAPPY/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can definitely feel embarrassing. However, I wouldn't worry too much about what your manager will think. These things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to resolve the issue. I'm sure your manager will appreciate that you took the initiative to fix the problem. The best thing is to be upfront about what happened and focus on the solution rather than dwelling on the mistake. With a calm, professional approach, I'm confident you can move past this. Let me know if there's anything else I can do to help.
case-35	HAPPY/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this").	I understand this must be frustrating. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing now is to focus on the solution. Since you were able to fix the issue, that's the key thing. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve it, and emphasize that you learned from the experience. Managers generally appreciate honesty and proactivity in addressing problems. With a clear explanation of how you handled it, they may be more understanding than you expect. Moving forward, you could ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-36	HAPPY/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CONFIDENCED_OVERWHELMED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but it sounds like you were able to recover it, which is good. I know it can be worrying to think about how your manager might react, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. I would suggest being upfront with your manager, explain what happened, and focus on the steps you took to resolve the issue. Chances are they will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - just focus on moving forward in a constructive ...
case-37	HAPPY/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/FEARFUL_DISTRICTFUL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but it sounds like you were able to recover it, which is good. I know it can be worrying to think about how your manager might react, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. I would suggest being upfront with your manager, explain what happened, and focus on the steps you took to resolve the issue. Chances are they will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - just focus on moving forward in a professional ... case-38	HAPPY/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but it sounds like you were able to recover it, which is good. I know it can be worrying to think about how your manager might react, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. I would suggest being upfront with your manager, explain what happened, and focus on the steps you took to resolve the issue. Chances are they will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - just focus on moving forward in a constructive ... case-39	HAPPY/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but it sounds like you were able to recover it, which is good. As for your manager, the best approach is to be upfront and take responsibility. Explain what happened, how you were able to fix it, and what you've learned to prevent it from happening again in the future. Most managers will appreciate your honesty and proactive approach. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to resolve it. Focus on the positive steps you took, and don't dwell on the mistake. I'm confident you can handle this ... case-40	HAPPY/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I'm sorry to hear you had that frustrating experience at work. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, which shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I'd suggest focusing on being proactive. When you have a chance, have an open conversation with them. Explain what happened, what you learned, and the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize your commitment to doing great work. Chances are, your manager will appreciate your honesty and responsibility. With a positive attitude, you can turn this into ...
case-41	HAPPY/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIST/CURIOS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about that situation at work. It can be really stressful when something like that happens, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Accidents happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate that you took responsibility and resolved the problem. Focus on learning from this experience, and don't dwell too much on the embarrassment. It's understandable to feel that way, but try to stay positive. You got through it, and that's what matters.
case-42	HAPPY/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIST/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about that situation at work. It can be really stressful when something like that happens, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Accidents happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate that you took responsibility and resolved the problem. I'm sure they'll understand it was an honest mistake. The best thing is to stay calm, focus on the solution, and not dwell too much on the mistake itself. You've got this!

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-43	HAPPY/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIS T/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this").	I understand this must be frustrating. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix it. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue and the time it required. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your proactive approach and owning up to the mistake. Moving forward, consider implementing some safeguards, like regularly backing up ...
case-44	HAPPY/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIS T/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can definitely feel embarrassing. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the mistake itself - instead, emphasize the steps you took to fix it. With a calm, professional approach, this should blow ...
case-45	HAPPY/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIS T/FEARFUL_DISTRICTFUL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand that must have been a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really frustrating. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to resolve the issue. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened, but focus on how you were able to fix the problem efficiently. Emphasize the steps you took to resolve it, rather than dwelling on the initial mistake. With a calm, professional approach, your manager will likely appreciate your responsibility in handling the situation. ... case-46	HAPPY/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIS T/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand that must have been a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really frustrating. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to resolve the issue. I'm sure your manager will appreciate that you took the time to properly address it. Going forward, you could consider implementing some extra safeguards to help prevent accidental deletions. But for now, try not to dwell on it too much. You handled the situation well.
case-47	HAPPY/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIS T/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can definitely feel embarrassing, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Most managers will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the mistake itself - just focus on ...
case-48	HAPPY/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIS T/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I'm sorry to hear you had that frustrating experience at work. It's understandable to feel embarrassed when something like that happens, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things can happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, which shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. I'm sure your manager will appreciate that you took the initiative to resolve it. Going forward, you could consider setting up some extra backups or safeguards to help prevent accidental deletions. But for now, try not to dwell on it too much. You got through this challenge, and that's what matters. Let me know if there's anything else I can do ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-49	HAPPY/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/CURIOUS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be upsetting, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the most careful of us. The best approach is to be upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to recover the file and the time it required. Focus on the actions you took to resolve the issue, rather than dwelling on the mistake itself. Your manager will likely appreciate your proactive approach and owning up to the situation. Moving forward, you could consider implementing some additional safeguards, like regularly backing up critical files, to help prevent similar incidents. But for now, the ... case-50	HAPPY/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. While your manager may have some questions, try not to be too hard on yourself. Focus on the fact that you were able to resolve the issue efficiently. Moving forward, you could consider implementing some additional safeguards or backup procedures to help prevent similar incidents. But for now, try not to dwell on it too much. The main thing is that you were able to fix the problem. Let me know if there's anything else I can do to help provide a practical perspective on this.
case-51	HAPPY/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 4. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. From an analytical perspective, the key now is to focus on next steps. I would suggest documenting what happened, including the steps you took to recover the file, and proactively sharing that information with your manager. This demonstrates your ownership of the issue and commitment to resolving it. When discussing it with your manager, I would recommend keeping the tone factual and solution-oriented. Acknowledge the mistake, but also highlight the actions you took to fix it. This shows your manager that you are taking responsibility and learning from the experience. Going forward, ...
case-52	HAPPY/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be upsetting, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Rather than worrying about your manager's reaction, I would suggest focusing on the steps you took to resolve the issue. When you meet with your manager, I recommend being upfront about what happened, explaining the actions you took to fix it, and outlining any process improvements you can implement to prevent similar issues in the future. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and are committed to doing your work more carefully going forward. The key is to take a proactive, solutions-oriented approach. I'm confident that if you communicate the ...
case-53	HAPPY/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. As a data-driven analyst, my recommendation would be to focus on the practical next steps. First, I suggest documenting what happened - the steps you took to resolve the issue and the time it took. That way you can proactively provide that information to your manager if needed. Second, I would recommend speaking to your manager directly and taking responsibility. Explain what happened, what you did to fix it, and any measures you've put in place to prevent it from happening again. Managers generally appreciate honesty and accountability. The key is to remain calm and professional. Avoid dwelling on feelings of embarrassment. Instead, demonstrate that you've learned from this experience ... case-54	HAPPY/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be upsetting, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the most careful people. The best approach is to be upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to recover the file and the time it required. Focus on the actions you took to resolve the issue efficiently. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility in addressing the problem. Moving forward, you could consider implementing some additional safeguards, like regularly backing up critical files, to help prevent similar incidents. But for now, the most important thing is communicating openly with your ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-55	HAPPY/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. While your manager may have some questions, try not to be too hard on yourself. The best approach is to be upfront, explain what happened, and outline the steps you took to resolve the issue. Focus on the positive - that you were able to fix the problem efficiently. Moving forward, you could suggest implementing some additional safeguards to prevent similar incidents. The key is to remain calm and professional. I'm confident you can handle this in a constructive way.
case-56	HAPPY/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. As a data-driven analyst, I can provide a practical perspective. The important thing now is to focus on the resolution - you were able to recover the file, which is the key outcome. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest taking a calm, factual approach. Explain what happened, emphasize that you were able to fix the issue, and outline any steps you've taken to prevent similar incidents in the future. Managers generally appreciate transparency and a solutions-oriented mindset. With a professional, constructive discussion, I'm confident you can move past this. The main thing is that the work got done, and now you have an opportunity to demonstrate your problem-solving abilities. Let ...
case-57	HAPPY/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/CURIOUS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand that must have been a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can definitely be embarrassing. However, try not to worry too much about what your manager will think. The important thing is that you were able to resolve the issue. Focus on learning from this experience and being more careful with important files going forward. I'm sure your manager will appreciate that you took responsibility and worked diligently to fix the problem. Just be upfront about what happened, and emphasize that you've learned from it. Things like this happen sometimes, and your manager is likely more concerned that you found a solution than dwelling on the mistake ...
case-58	HAPPY/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand that must have been a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really frustrating. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When you talk to your manager, focus on explaining what happened and the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your proactive approach. Try not to dwell on the mistake - just move ...
case-59	HAPPY/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be frustrating. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing now is to focus on the solution. First, I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation clearly and concisely, and emphasize the steps you took to fix the issue. Managers generally appreciate honesty and proactivity in these situations. Moving forward, you could look into setting up automated backups or version control for critical files to prevent this from happening again. And consider reviewing your file management processes to identify any ... case-60	HAPPY/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/CONFIDENT_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell too much on the embarrassment - just focus ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-61	HAPPY/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but it sounds like you were able to recover it, which is good. I know it can be worrying to think about how your manager might react, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. I would suggest being upfront with your manager, explain what happened, and focus on the steps you took to resolve the issue. Chances are they will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Just try to stay calm and remember that this is a learning experience - it doesn't ...
case-62	HAPPY/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand that must have been a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can definitely be embarrassing. However, try not to worry too much about what your manager will think. The important thing is that you were able to resolve the issue. Focus on learning from this experience and being more careful with important files going forward. I'm sure your manager will appreciate that you took responsibility and got the problem sorted out. Just be upfront about what happened if they ask, and emphasize that you've learned from it. Things like this happen sometimes, and as long as you handle it professionally, I'm sure it will be okay.
case-63	HAPPY/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can definitely feel embarrassing. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I'd suggest focusing on being proactive. When you have a chance, have an open conversation with your manager. Explain what happened, what steps you took to resolve it, and any measures you'll put in place to prevent it from happening again. Chances are, your manager will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling the situation. ...
case-64	HAPPY/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about that situation at work. It can be really stressful when something like that happens, even if you were able to resolve it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - we all make mistakes sometimes. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. I'm sure your manager will appreciate that you took responsibility and got it sorted out. Going forward, you could look into ways to back up important files more securely to prevent something like this from happening again. But for now, try not to dwell on it too much. You handled it well, and that's what matters.
case-65	TRUSTING/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CURIIOUS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The best thing you can do now is to be upfront with your manager. Explain what happened, how you were able to fix it, and any steps you'll take to prevent it from happening again. Managers generally appreciate honesty and accountability. With a calm, professional approach, I'm sure you can get through this. Just focus on the solution, not the mistake. Let me know if you need any other suggestions as ...
case-66	TRUSTING/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. While it's understandable to feel embarrassed, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the main thing is that you were able to resolve the issue. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain that you made a mistake, but that you were able to recover the file and learn from the experience. Focus on the steps you took to fix the problem, and emphasize your commitment to being more careful going forward. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-67	TRUSTING/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 5. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Rather than dwelling on the mistake, I would suggest focusing on the steps you took to resolve the issue efficiently. When speaking with your manager, I recommend being upfront about what happened, emphasizing the actions you took to fix it, and outlining any process improvements you plan to implement to prevent similar issues in the future. Managers generally appreciate honesty and proactive problem-solving. With a clear plan, you can demonstrate your commitment to doing your job well. The key is to remain calm and professional. I'm confident you can handle this in ... case-68	TRUSTING/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CONFERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility. The main thing is not to dwell on the mistake. Learn what you can from it, then ... case-69	TRUSTING/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The best thing you can do now is to be upfront with your manager. Explain what happened, how you were able to fix it, and any steps you'll take to prevent it from happening again. Managers generally appreciate honesty and accountability. With a calm, professional approach, I'm sure you can get through this. Just focus on the solution, not the mistake. You've got this. case-70	TRUSTING/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The best thing you can do now is to be upfront with your manager. Explain what happened, how you were able to fix it, and any steps you'll take to prevent it from happening again. Managers generally appreciate honesty and accountability. With a calm, professional approach, I'm sure you can get through this. Just focus on the solution, not the mistake. Let me know if you need any other suggestions as ... case-71	TRUSTING/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. While it's understandable to feel embarrassed, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the main thing is that you were able to resolve the issue efficiently. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened, but also emphasize the steps you took to fix it. Highlight that you were able to recover the file in a timely manner. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Moving forward, you could also suggest ways to prevent similar ... case-72	TRUSTING/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The best thing you can do now is to be upfront with your manager. Explain what happened, how you were able to resolve it, and any steps you'll take to prevent it from happening again. Managers generally appreciate honesty and accountability. With a calm, professional approach, I'm sure you can get through this. Just focus on the solution, not the mistake. You've got this!

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-73	TRUSTING/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CURIOUS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - just focus on moving ... case-74	TRUSTING/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - just focus on ...
case-75	TRUSTING/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be frustrating. Accidentally deleting an important file is a common mistake, even for experienced professionals. The important thing now is to focus on resolving the issue. Here are a few suggestions that may help: - Document the steps you took to recover the file and the time it took. This shows you took it seriously and worked diligently to fix it. - Speak to your manager proactively. Explain what happened, what you did to resolve it, and any measures you'll take to prevent it in the future. This demonstrates accountability. - Avoid dwelling on feelings of embarrassment. Focus on the solution and next steps. I know it can be stressful, but try not to be too ... case-76	TRUSTING/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really frustrating. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on feeling embarrassed ...
case-77	TRUSTING/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, and I can see why you're worried about how your manager will react. The good news is that you were able to fix the issue, which shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. Rather than dwelling on the mistake, I would suggest focusing on what you learned from the experience and how you can prevent something similar from happening in the future. Is there a way you can implement better backup procedures or be more careful with important files going forward? Bringing solutions to the table when you speak with your manager will demonstrate your proactivity. Remember, everyone makes mistakes sometimes. The key ...
case-78	TRUSTING/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. As for your manager, the best approach is to be upfront and take responsibility. Explain what happened, how you fixed it, and what you've learned to prevent it in the future. Managers generally appreciate honesty and proactivity. Focus on the solution rather than dwelling on the mistake. With a clear plan going forward, I'm confident you can move past this.

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-79	TRUSTING/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CRI TICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is good. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront and honest about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility. The main thing is not to dwell on the mistake. Learn from it, ...
case-80	TRUSTING/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/ENT HUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront and honest about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue, and emphasize that you learned from the experience. Most managers will appreciate your transparency and responsibility in handling the situation. With a clear plan to prevent it from happening again, they may see this as an opportunity for growth rather than something to be overly concerned ... case-81	TRUSTING/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/C URIOUS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain that you made a mistake, but that you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize the steps you took to fix it and what you learned from the experience. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling the situation. The ...
case-82	TRUSTING/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/E XCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can feel really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain that you made a mistake, but that you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize the steps you took to fix it and what you learned from the experience. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. The key ... case-83	TRUSTING/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/C AUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this").	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing now is to focus on the steps you took to fix the issue. Rather than worrying about your manager's reaction, I would suggest being proactive. When you have a chance, have an open and honest conversation with them. Explain what happened, the actions you took to resolve it, and any measures you'll put in place to prevent similar issues in the future. Managers generally appreciate transparency and responsibility. With a clear plan, they ...
case-84	TRUSTING/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/C ONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can feel really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility. Try not to ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-85	TRUSTING/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/F EARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can feel really upsetting. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and will be more careful going forward. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on feeling embarrassed - your manager ... case-86	TRUSTING/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/N EUTRAL_UNDECIDED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really frustrating. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. ...
case-87	TRUSTING/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/C RITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The most important thing now is to focus on resolving the issue. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the problem and reassure them that it won't happen again. Chances are, they will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing it. Moving forward, you could look into ways to better backup or version control important files to prevent ...
case-88	TRUSTING/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/E NTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really frustrating. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - ...
case-89	TRUSTING/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CURIO US_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes a lot of time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the most careful people. The best thing is that you were able to fix the issue. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve it and the time it required. Focus on the positive - that you were able to recover the file and get things back on track. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Try not to dwell ... case-90	TRUSTING/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/EXCITE D_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can definitely feel embarrassing, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the most careful people. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation honestly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue efficiently. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility in handling it. Many managers understand that occasional mistakes are part of the learning process. The key is demonstrating that you learned from this experience. Try not to dwell on ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-91	TRUSTING/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. The best approach here is to be upfront with your manager. Explain what happened, how you were able to recover the file, and the steps you've taken to prevent this from happening again in the future. Managers generally appreciate honesty and proactive problem-solving. Focus on the resolution rather than dwelling on the mistake. Moving forward, I'd suggest reviewing your file backup and recovery processes to identify any areas for improvement. Implementing more robust safeguards can help mitigate the risk of this happening again. Let me know if you need any advice on that. The ... case-92	TRUSTING/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a significant amount of time fixing it can be quite upsetting. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the most careful of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Most managers will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling the situation. With a level-headed ... case-93	TRUSTING/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes a significant amount of time to resolve. However, I would encourage you not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and the time it required. Focus on the positive - that you were able to recover the file and resolve the problem. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the situation. Try not to dwell on feelings ... case-94	TRUSTING/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be upsetting, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the most careful people. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is good. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront and honest about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and the time it required. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility in resolving the problem. Focus on the positive outcome rather than dwelling on the mistake. With a calm, professional approach, this should blow over. Let me know if you have any ... case-95	TRUSTING/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront and taking responsibility. Explain what happened, the steps you took to resolve it, and any measures you'll take to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and proactive approach. Focus on solutions rather than dwelling on the mistake. With a calm, professional demeanor, you can move forward productively. Does this ... case-96	TRUSTING/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront and honest about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue, and emphasize that you learned from the experience. Most managers will appreciate your transparency and responsibility in handling the situation. With a calm, professional approach, this can be an opportunity to demonstrate your problem-solving skills. The main thing is not to dwell on the mistake. Focus ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-97	TRUSTING/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/ CURIOUS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes a lot of time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue and the time it required. Focus on the positive - that you were able to recover the file and get it working again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Try not to dwell on feeling embarrassed. Just communicate the facts clearly ... case-98	TRUSTING/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/ EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes a lot of time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue and the time it required. Focus on the positive - that you were able to recover the file and get it back on track. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Try not to dwell on feeling embarrassed. Just communicate ...
case-99	TRUSTING/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/ CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this").	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be stressful, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, even to the most careful of us. The best thing to do now is to be upfront with your manager. Explain what happened, how you were able to recover the file, and what steps you've taken to prevent it from happening again. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and are committed to being more vigilant going forward. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling the situation. Moving forward, consider implementing some safeguards, like regularly backing up critical files or ...
case-100	TRUSTING/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/ CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a significant amount of time fixing it can be really frustrating. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment ... case-101	TRUSTING/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/ FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, and I can see why you're worried about how your manager will react. The good news is that you were able to recover the file, even if it took some time. That shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. Rather than dwelling on the mistake, I would suggest focusing on what you learned from the experience and how you can prevent something similar from happening in the future. Is there a way you can implement better backup procedures or be more careful with important files going forward? Bringing those kinds of solutions to your manager may help turn this into a learning opportunity. ...
case-102	TRUSTING/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/ NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes a lot of time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue and the time it required. Focus on the positive - that you were able to recover the file and get it working again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Try not to dwell on feeling embarrassed. Just present the ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-103	TRUSTING/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/ CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes a lot of time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue and the time it required. Focus on the positive - that you were able to recover the file and get it working again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Try not to dwell on feeling embarrassed. Just communicate the facts clearly ... case-104	TRUSTING/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/ ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but it sounds like you were able to recover it, which is good. I know it can be worrying to think about how your manager might react, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. I would suggest being upfront with your manager, explain what happened, and focus on the steps you took to resolve it. Chances are they will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Going forward, you could look into ways to better safeguard important ... case-105	TRUSTING/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONA LIST/CURIOUS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes a lot of time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue and the time it required. Focus on the positive - that you were able to recover the file and get it working again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Try not to dwell on feeling embarrassed. Just communicate clearly about what ...
case-106	TRUSTING/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONA LIST/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I'm sorry to hear you had that experience at work. It can be really stressful when something like that happens, especially with an important file. I understand feeling embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix it, which is great. As for your manager, I'm sure they'll appreciate that you took responsibility and resolved the issue. Focus on that positive outcome rather than worrying too much. If you're still feeling uneasy, you could consider briefly mentioning it to your manager in a straightforward way, just to get it off your chest. But try not to dwell on it ...
case-107	TRUSTING/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONA LIST/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this").	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be stressful, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the problem and emphasize that you learned from the experience. Managers generally appreciate honesty and accountability. With a clear explanation, they may see this as an opportunity for you to demonstrate your problem-solving skills. Moving forward, you could look into ways to better safeguard important files, such ... case-108	TRUSTING/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONA LIST/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really frustrating. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The best thing to do now is to be upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the mistake - just ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-109	TRUSTING/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONAL/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes a lot of time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the most careful people. The best thing is that you were able to fix the issue. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve it, and emphasize that you learned from the experience. Managers generally appreciate honesty and responsibility. With a calm, professional approach, this likely won't be as big of a deal as you're worried it might be. Let me know if you need any other ... case-110	TRUSTING/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONAL/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can definitely feel embarrassing. However, I wouldn't worry too much about what your manager will think. Mistakes happen, and the important thing is that you were able to resolve the issue. I'm sure your manager will appreciate that you took the initiative to fix the problem. The best thing is to be upfront about what happened and focus on the solution rather than dwelling on the mistake. With a calm, professional approach, I'm confident you can move past this. Let me know if there's anything else I can do to help.
case-111	TRUSTING/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONAL/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes a lot of time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix it. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue and the time it required. Focus on the positive - that you were able to recover the file and get it working again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Try not to dwell on feeling embarrassed. ...
case-112	TRUSTING/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONAL/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I'm sorry to hear you had that frustrating experience at work. It's understandable to feel embarrassed when something like that happens, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These kinds of mistakes can happen, even to the most careful people. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, which shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I'd suggest focusing on having an open and honest conversation with them. Explain what happened, what you learned, and the steps you took to resolve it. Chances are, they'll appreciate your transparency and responsibility in handling the situation. Many managers understand that occasional mistakes are part of the learning process. ...
case-113	TRUSTING/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/CURIIOUS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be upsetting, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the most careful of us. The best approach is to be upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to recover the file and the time it required. Focus on the actions you took to resolve the issue, rather than dwelling on the mistake itself. Your manager will likely appreciate your proactive approach and owning up to the situation. Moving forward, you could consider implementing some additional safeguards, like regularly backing up critical files, to help prevent similar incidents. But for now, the ... case-114	TRUSTING/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. While your manager may have some questions, try not to be too hard on yourself. The best thing to do now is to focus on the steps you took to resolve the issue efficiently. I would suggest briefly explaining the situation to your manager, emphasizing the actions you took to fix it quickly. Highlight that you learned from this experience and have implemented safeguards to prevent it from happening again in the future. With a calm, professional approach, you can turn this into a learning opportunity. The key is to ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-115	TRUSTING/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 4. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be stressful, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. The best approach here is to be proactive and transparent with your manager. I would suggest scheduling a brief meeting to explain what happened - focus on the steps you took to recover the file and the measures you've put in place to prevent similar issues in the future. Emphasize your commitment to your work and your desire to learn from this experience. Your manager will likely appreciate your taking responsibility and demonstrating initiative to resolve the problem. Avoid dwelling on feelings of embarrassment. Instead, present it as a learning opportunity that will make you a ... case-116	TRUSTING/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend significant time fixing it can be quite upsetting. However, the best thing to do now is to focus on the practical next steps. I would suggest being proactive and having a calm, factual conversation with your manager about what happened. Explain the issue clearly, take responsibility, and outline the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have implemented measures to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and initiative in addressing the problem. The key is to communicate the issue professionally, without dwelling on feelings of embarrassment. With a constructive approach, ... case-117	TRUSTING/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is understandably upsetting. My recommendation would be to have an open and honest conversation with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue and the lessons you've learned. Focus on the actions you've taken to address the problem, rather than dwelling on the mistake itself. Your manager will likely appreciate your proactive approach and transparency. Moving forward, consider implementing some safeguards, like regularly backing up critical files, to help prevent similar issues. The key is to learn from this experience and demonstrate your commitment to doing your job well.
case-118	TRUSTING/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a significant amount of time fixing it can be quite upsetting. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the most careful of us. The best approach now is to be proactive. I would suggest speaking directly with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and objectively, emphasize that you were able to recover the file, and outline the steps you've taken to prevent it from happening again in the future. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility in handling the issue. Going forward, I recommend reviewing your file backup and recovery processes ...
case-119	TRUSTING/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be upsetting, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Rather than worrying about your manager's reaction, I would suggest focusing on the steps you took to resolve the issue. When you meet with your manager, I recommend being upfront about what happened, explaining the actions you took to fix it, and outlining any process improvements you can implement to prevent similar issues in the future. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and are committed to doing your work more carefully going forward. Staying calm and solution-oriented is likely the best approach. I'm confident that if you handle this ... case-120	TRUSTING/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. While your manager may have questions, try not to be too hard on yourself. Focus on the fact that you were able to resolve the issue efficiently. Moving forward, I would suggest documenting the steps you took to recover the file, so you can reference that if needed. Additionally, you may want to consider implementing some safeguards, like regularly backing up critical files, to help prevent this from happening again. The main thing is that the file is recovered and you learned from the experience. Stay positive, and be prepared ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-121	TRUSTING/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/ CURIOS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but it sounds like you were able to recover it, which is good. I know it can be worrying to think about how your manager might react, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. I would suggest being upfront with your manager, explain what happened, and focus on the steps you took to resolve the issue. Chances are they will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - just focus on learning from this experience and ...
case-122	TRUSTING/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/ EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand that must have been a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can be really frustrating. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell ... case-123	TRUSTING/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/ CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this").	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be stressful, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I suggest focusing on documenting what happened and the steps you took to resolve it. That way, you can proactively address it if it comes up, and demonstrate your problem-solving skills. Going forward, you may also want to consider implementing some safeguards, like regularly backing up critical files, to help prevent this from happening again. The key ...
case-124	TRUSTING/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/ CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really frustrating. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The best thing to do now is to be upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize the steps you took to fix it efficiently. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the mistake itself - just focus on the positive that you were ...
case-125	TRUSTING/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/ FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes a lot of time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue and the time it required. Focus on the positive - that you were able to recover the file and get it working again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Try not to dwell on feeling embarrassed. Just communicate clearly about what ...
case-126	TRUSTING/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/ NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a significant amount of time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I would suggest focusing on the positive - that you were able to recover the file and resolve the issue. When speaking with your manager, be upfront about what happened, take responsibility, and emphasize the steps you took to fix it. Chances are, they will appreciate your honesty and diligence in resolving the problem. The best thing you ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-127	TRUSTING/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/ CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront and honest about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue, and emphasize that you learned from the experience. Most managers will appreciate your transparency and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - focus on the positive that you were able to resolve it. With a calm, professional approach, I'm sure ...
case-128	TRUSTING/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/ ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I'm sorry to hear you had that frustrating experience at work. Accidentally deleting an important file can definitely be stressful, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. I know it's easy to worry about what your manager might think, but try not to assume the worst. Many managers understand that these kinds of mistakes can happen, and will likely appreciate that you were able to resolve the issue efficiently. If you feel comfortable, you could even consider proactively mentioning it to your manager, framing it as a learning experience. That shows accountability and ...
case-129	CONFIDENT/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CU RIOUS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, even to the best of us. The best thing you can do now is to be upfront with your manager. Explain what happened, how you were able to resolve it, and any steps you'll take to prevent it from happening again. Managers generally appreciate honesty and accountability. Focus on the positive - that you were able to fix the issue in a timely manner. I'm confident that if you approach this professionally, your manager will understand. Just be ...
case-130	CONFIDENT/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/EX CITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. While it's understandable to feel embarrassed, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the main thing is that you were able to resolve the issue efficiently. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened, but also emphasize the steps you took to fix it quickly. Highlight that you learned from the experience and have implemented safeguards to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your proactive approach. Focus on the positive - that you were able to ...
case-131	CONFIDENT/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CA UTIIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 5. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. While your manager may have questions, focus on explaining the steps you took to resolve the issue efficiently. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have strategies in place to prevent similar mistakes in the future. Moving forward, I suggest documenting the recovery process you used, so you can reference it if needed. That way, you can demonstrate your problem-solving skills. The key is to remain calm and professional when discussing this with your manager. I'm confident you can handle this in a constructive way.
case-132	CONFIDENT/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CO NCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. While it's understandable to feel embarrassed, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the main thing is that you were able to resolve the issue efficiently. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened, but also emphasize the steps you took to fix it. Highlight that you were able to recover the file in a timely manner. Your manager will likely appreciate your proactive approach and owning up to the mistake. Moving forward, you could also suggest ways to prevent ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-133	CONFIDENT/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. While it's understandable to feel embarrassed, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the main thing is that you were able to resolve the issue efficiently. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened, but also emphasize the steps you took to fix it quickly. Highlight that you learned from the experience and have implemented safeguards to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your proactive approach. Focus on the positive - that you were able to ... case-134	CONFIDENT/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. While it's understandable to feel embarrassed, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the main thing is that you were able to resolve the issue efficiently. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened, but also emphasize the steps you took to fix it. Highlight that you were able to recover the file in a timely manner. Your manager will likely appreciate your proactive approach and owning up to the mistake. Moving forward, you could also suggest ways to prevent ... case-135	CONFIDENT/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, even to the best of us. The best thing you can do now is to be upfront with your manager. Explain what happened, how you were able to resolve it, and any steps you'll take to prevent it from happening again. Managers generally appreciate honesty and accountability. Focus on the positive - that you were able to fix the issue in a timely manner. I'm confident that if you approach this professionally, your manager will understand. Just be ... case-136	CONFIDENT/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The next step is to have an open conversation with your manager. Explain what happened, how you were able to fix it, and what you've learned from the experience. Emphasize that it was an honest mistake and that you're committed to being more careful going forward. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility. In the meantime, don't dwell too much on the embarrassment. Focus on the positive - you were able ... case-137	CONFIDENT/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/COURIOUS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and reassure them that it won't happen again. Focus on the solution rather than dwelling on the mistake. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in resolving the problem. The key is to stay calm and professional. You've got this. case-138	CONFIDENT/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and reassure them that it won't happen again. Emphasize that you learned from this experience. Most managers will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in resolving the problem. Focus on the positive - that you were able to recover the file and prevent further issues. With a clear, direct approach, I think you can move past this ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-139	CONFIDENT/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be frustrating. Accidentally deleting an important file is a common mistake, even for experienced professionals. The important thing now is to focus on resolving the issue and learning from it. First, I would suggest documenting what happened and the steps you took to recover the file. That way, if your manager has any questions, you can provide a clear explanation. Going forward, consider implementing some safeguards, like regularly backing up critical files, to prevent this from happening again. As for your manager, try not to assume the worst. Approach them calmly and take responsibility for the mistake. Emphasize that you were able to recover the file and that you've identified ways to strengthen your processes. With ...
case-140	CONFIDENT/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and reassure them that it won't happen again. Emphasize that you learned from this experience. Most managers will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in resolving the problem. Focus on the positive - that you were able to recover the file and prevent further issues. With a clear, direct approach, I think you can move past this ... case-141	CONFIDENT/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this is a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be stressful, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, even if it took some time. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you resolved the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - just focus on the solution. Does this help provide a constructive perspective? Let ...
case-142	CONFIDENT/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and reassure them that it won't happen again. Focusing on the solution rather than dwelling on the mistake is usually the best approach. The key is to stay calm and professional. I'm confident you can handle this in a constructive way.
case-143	CONFIDENT/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and reassure them that it won't happen again. Focus on the solution rather than dwelling on the mistake. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in resolving the problem. The key is to stay calm and professional. You've got this. case-144	CONFIDENT/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I suggest focusing on the positive - that you were able to fix the issue efficiently. When you speak with your manager, be upfront about what happened, explain the steps you took to resolve it, and emphasize that you learned from the experience. Managers generally appreciate honesty and proactivity in these situations. Moving forward, you could also consider implementing some safeguards, like regularly backing up important files, to help prevent ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-145	CONFIDENT/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/ CURIOS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is good. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and reassure them that it won't happen again. Focus on the solution rather than dwelling on the mistake. Your manager will likely appreciate your responsibility in addressing the problem. Try not to get too caught up in feelings of embarrassment - your manager is there to support you. ...
case-146	CONFIDENT/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/ EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can feel really upsetting. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on feeling embarrassed - ...
case-147	CONFIDENT/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/ CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this").	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be stressful, but try not to be too hard on yourself. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, even if it took some time. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue, and emphasize that you learned from the experience. Focusing on the solution rather than dwelling on the mistake is often the best approach. With a calm, professional attitude, your manager is more likely to appreciate your responsibility in handling the situation. The key is to stay grounded and avoid getting caught up in feelings of embarrassment. ...
case-148	CONFIDENT/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/ CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can feel really upsetting. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest focusing on the positive - that you were able to resolve the issue. When speaking to your manager, be honest about what happened, but also emphasize that you were able to fix it. Approach the conversation calmly and focus on the solution, not just the problem. I'm sure your manager will appreciate your responsibility in addressing it. Try not to ...
case-149	CONFIDENT/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/ FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can feel really upsetting. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on feeling embarrassed - your manager understands ...
case-150	CONFIDENT/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/ NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a significant amount of time fixing it can feel embarrassing. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to resolve the issue. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I suggest focusing on what you learned from this experience and how you can prevent similar situations in the future. Is there a way you could implement better backup procedures or be more cautious when working with important files? Reflecting on that may help you feel more in control. In the meantime, try not ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-151	CONFIDENT/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/ CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a significant amount of time fixing it can be upsetting. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to resolve the issue. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I suggest focusing on the positive - that you were able to recover the file and get it taken care of. When speaking with your manager, be upfront about what happened, explain the steps you took to fix it, and emphasize that you've learned from the experience. Managers generally appreciate honesty and responsibility. With ...
case-152	CONFIDENT/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/ ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Most managers will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling the issue. This is not the end of the world, and your manager is likely more ...
case-153	CONFIDENT/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CURI OUS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can definitely feel embarrassing, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the most careful people. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Most managers will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling the issue. With a professional, solutions-focused approach, this doesn't have to be ...
case-154	CONFIDENT/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/EXCIT ED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the most careful of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Most managers will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling the issue. With a professional, solutions-focused approach, this doesn't have to be a ... case-155	CONFIDENT/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CAUTI OUS_SKEPTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this").	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be stressful, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, even to the most careful people. The best approach now is to be upfront with your manager. Explain what happened, how you were able to recover the file, and the steps you've taken to prevent it from happening again in the future. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and are committed to being more vigilant. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility. Moving forward, consider implementing a more robust backup system or file versioning to minimize the risk of data ... case-156	CONFIDENT/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CONC ERNED_OVERWHELMED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is good. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Most managers will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling the issue. With a professional, solutions-focused approach, this doesn't have to be a major ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-157	CONFIDENT/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the most careful people. The best thing is that you were able to fix the issue. When speaking to your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve it and the time it required. Focus on the positive - that you were able to recover the file and get things back on track. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Try not to dwell on feeling embarrassed. ... case-158	CONFIDENT/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the most careful people. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the problem and the time it required. Focus on the actions you took, rather than dwelling on the mistake itself. Your manager will likely appreciate your proactivity and responsibility in addressing the situation. Moving forward, you could consider implementing some additional safeguards, like regularly backing ...
case-159	CONFIDENT/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can definitely feel embarrassing, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the most careful people. The best thing to do now is to be upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to recover the file and the time it took. Focus on the positive - that you were able to fix the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Going forward, you could look into ways to better safeguard important files, like using version control or cloud backups. But for now, don't dwell on the ...
case-160	CONFIDENT/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but it's good that you were able to recover it after some hard work. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, even to the most careful people. The best approach is to be upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and reassure them that it won't happen again. Emphasize the lessons you've learned and your commitment to being more vigilant going forward. Most managers will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling the situation. This is a learning experience, and you can use it to strengthen your skills ...
case-161	CONFIDENT/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CURIOS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can definitely feel embarrassing, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is good. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell too much on the mistake itself. The ... case-162	CONFIDENT/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue efficiently. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Most managers will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - just focus on the ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-163	CONFIDENT/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be frustrating. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. However, the best thing you can do now is to be upfront with your manager. Explain what happened, how you were able to recover the file, and the steps you've taken to prevent it from happening again. Managers generally appreciate honesty and accountability. Focus on the solution rather than dwelling on the mistake. With a clear plan to avoid similar issues in the future, your manager is likely to appreciate your proactive approach.
case-164	CONFIDENT/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a significant amount of time fixing it can be quite upsetting. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to resolve the issue. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I would suggest focusing on being proactive. When you have a chance, have an open conversation with your manager. Explain what happened, what steps you took to fix it, and what you've learned from the experience. Emphasize your commitment to your work and your desire to prevent similar issues in the future. Approaching ...
case-165	CONFIDENT/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/FEARFUL_DISTRICTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is good. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Most managers will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - just focus on the positive ... case-166	CONFIDENT/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is good. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Most managers will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell too much on the embarrassment - just focus on ...
case-167	CONFIDENT/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but it sounds like you were able to recover it, which is good. As for your manager, the best approach is to be upfront and take responsibility. Explain what happened, how you were able to fix it, and what you've learned to prevent it from happening again in the future. Most managers will appreciate your honesty and proactive approach. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to resolve it. Focus on the positive steps you took, and don't dwell on the mistake. I'm confident you can handle this ... case-168	CONFIDENT/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can be really stressful. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I'd suggest focusing on the positive - that you were able to resolve the issue efficiently. When you speak to your manager, be upfront about what happened, explain the steps you took to fix it, and emphasize that you learned from the experience. Managers generally appreciate honesty and proactivity in these situations. With a calm, professional approach, ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-169	CONFIDENT/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATION ALIST/CURIOUS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can definitely feel embarrassing, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Most managers will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell too much on the mistake itself. The main ... case-170	CONFIDENT/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATION ALIST/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand that must have been a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really frustrating. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When you speak to your manager, I'd suggest focusing on what you learned from the experience and the steps you took to resolve the issue efficiently. Emphasize your commitment to doing good work. With a calm, professional approach, I'm sure your manager will appreciate your handling of the situation.
case-171	CONFIDENT/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATION ALIST/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this").	I understand this must be frustrating. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes time to resolve. The best thing is to be upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and what you've learned from the experience. Focus on the solution rather than dwelling on the mistake. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Going forward, consider implementing some extra safeguards to prevent similar errors. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, and the key is learning from it.
case-172	CONFIDENT/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATION ALIST/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but it sounds like you were able to recover it, which is good. I know it can be worrying to think about how your manager might react, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. I would suggest being upfront with your manager, explain what happened, and focus on the steps you took to resolve the issue. Chances are they will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - just focus on moving forward productively. Let me ... case-173	CONFIDENT/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATION ALIST/FEARFUL_DISTRICTFUL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes a lot of time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the most careful people. The best approach is to be upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and the lessons you've learned. Emphasize your commitment to your work and your desire to prevent similar mistakes in the future. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility. With a calm, professional attitude, you can move forward productively. Let me know if you need any other suggestions for how ...
case-174	CONFIDENT/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATION ALIST/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes a lot of time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue and the time it required. Focus on the positive - that you were able to recover the file and get it working again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Try not to dwell on feeling embarrassed. Just communicate clearly about what ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-175	CONFIDENT/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATION ALIST/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes a lot of time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix it. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue and the time it required. Focus on the positive - that you were able to recover the file and get it working again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Try not to dwell on feeling embarrassed. ... case-176	CONFIDENT/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATION ALIST/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand that must have been a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can definitely be frustrating. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the most careful people. The important thing is that you were able to resolve the issue. I wouldn't worry too much about what your manager will think. If you're upfront about what happened and how you were able to fix it, they'll likely appreciate your honesty and diligence in resolving the problem. Focus on learning from this experience so you can be even more careful with important files going forward. With your hard work and attention to ...
case-177	CONFIDENT/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/C URIOUS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step.	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. While your manager may have some questions, try not to be too hard on yourself. Focus on the fact that you were able to resolve the issue efficiently. Moving forward, I would suggest documenting the steps you took to recover the file, in case your manager has any follow-up questions. That way, you can demonstrate your problem-solving skills. The main thing is that the file is now restored, and you can move on. Try not to dwell on the mistake - learn from it, and be proactive about preventing similar ...
case-178	CONFIDENT/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/E XCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step.	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. While your manager may have some questions, try not to be too hard on yourself. Focus on the fact that you were able to resolve the issue efficiently. Moving forward, I would suggest documenting the steps you took to recover the file, in case your manager has any follow-up questions. That way, you can demonstrate your problem-solving skills. The main thing is that the file is now restored, and you can move on. Try not to dwell on the mistake - learn from it, and be proactive about preventing similar ...
case-179	CONFIDENT/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/C AUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 4. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this").	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. From a practical standpoint, I would suggest documenting the steps you took to recover the file, including the time it took. That way, if your manager has any questions, you can provide a clear explanation of what happened and the actions you took to resolve it. Going forward, I would recommend reviewing your file backup and recovery processes to see if there are any improvements that could be made to prevent similar issues in the future. Implementing stronger safeguards may help provide some reassurance. In terms of speaking with your manager, I ...
case-180	CONFIDENT/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/C ONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step.	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. My recommendation would be to have an open and honest conversation with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and the measures you've put in place to prevent it from happening again. Focus on the practical solutions rather than dwelling on the mistake itself. Your manager will likely appreciate your proactive approach. Moving forward, I suggest reviewing your file management processes to identify any areas for improvement. Implementing some additional safeguards could help avoid similar incidents. Please let me know if you would like any suggestions on ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-181	CONFIDENT/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/F EARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. While your manager may have questions, try not to be too hard on yourself. Focus on the fact that you were able to resolve the issue efficiently. Moving forward, I would suggest documenting the steps you took to recover the file, so you can reference that if needed. And consider implementing some additional safeguards, like regularly backing up critical files, to help prevent this from happening again. The main thing is that you were able to fix the problem - try not to dwell too much on the initial mistake. ... case-182	CONFIDENT/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/N EUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. While your manager may have questions, try not to be too hard on yourself. The best approach is to be upfront, explain what happened, and outline the steps you took to resolve the issue. Focus on the positive - that you were able to fix the problem efficiently. Going forward, you may want to review your file management processes to see if there are any improvements you can make to prevent similar incidents. But for now, try not to dwell on it too much. The main thing is that you ...
case-183	CONFIDENT/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/C RITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. While your manager may have some questions, focus on explaining the steps you took to resolve the issue efficiently. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have implemented safeguards to prevent it from happening again. The best approach is to be upfront, take responsibility, and demonstrate how you've improved your processes. With a calm, professional demeanor, you can move forward productively. Let me know if you need any other suggestions for how to handle this with your manager.
case-184	CONFIDENT/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/E NTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can be stressful. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. Moving forward, I would suggest a few practical steps: 1. Proactively reach out to your manager and explain what happened. Take responsibility, but also highlight how you were able to resolve the issue efficiently. This shows your manager that you are accountable and capable. 2. Consider implementing some additional safeguards, like regularly backing up critical files, to prevent this from happening again. Being proactive about process improvements ... case-185	CONFIDENT/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORME R/CURIOUS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand that must have been a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can definitely be embarrassing. However, I wouldn't worry too much about what your manager will think. Mistakes happen, and the important thing is that you were able to resolve the issue. Focus on learning from this experience so you can be more careful with important files going forward. Your manager will likely appreciate that you took responsibility and got the problem fixed. Just be upfront about what happened, and I'm sure they'll understand. The main thing is that the file is recovered and the work is done.
case-186	CONFIDENT/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORME R/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand that must have been a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can be really frustrating. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I'd suggest focusing on being proactive. When you have a chance, have an open conversation with your manager. Explain what happened, what steps you took to resolve it, and any measures you'll put in place to prevent it from happening again in the future. Showing that you took responsibility and learned from the experience can ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-187	CONFIDENT/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be frustrating. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. However, the best thing you can do now is to be upfront with your manager. Explain what happened, how you were able to recover the file, and the steps you've taken to prevent it from happening again. Managers generally appreciate honesty and accountability. Focus on the solution rather than dwelling on the mistake. With a clear plan to avoid similar issues in the future, your manager is likely to appreciate your proactive approach. The key is to communicate the situation directly and avoid getting defensive. I'm confident you can handle this professionally.
case-188	CONFIDENT/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - just focus on moving forward in a ... case-189	CONFIDENT/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/FEARFUL_DISTRICTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is good. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize the steps you took to fix it and what you learned. Most managers will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - just focus on the positive that you were able to ...
case-190	CONFIDENT/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand that can be a really stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it is never fun. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. As for your manager, my advice would be to be upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Most managers will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on ...
case-191	CONFIDENT/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - just focus on moving forward in a ... case-192	CONFIDENT/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand that must have been a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can definitely be frustrating. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the most careful people. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I'd suggest focusing on the positive - that you were able to resolve the issue efficiently. If your manager does bring it up, be honest and upfront. Explain what happened, what you learned, and how you'll be more cautious going forward. Most managers appreciate that kind of transparency. The key is to stay calm and ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-193	PEACEFUL/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CURIOUS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Accidents happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, which shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. Rather than worrying about your manager's reaction, I suggest focusing on what you learned from this experience. Think about how you can be more careful with important files going forward. You could even propose a system or process to help prevent similar mistakes in the future. Presenting it as a constructive solution rather than dwelling on the mistake itself may help. Remember, your manager is likely more interested in ... case-194	PEACEFUL/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, which shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. Rather than worrying about your manager's reaction, I would suggest focusing on what you learned from this experience. Think about how you can be more careful with important files going forward. You could even propose a process improvement to help prevent similar mistakes in the future. Presenting it as a learning opportunity rather than a failure can go a long way. Remember, your manager is likely more ...
case-195	PEACEFUL/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 5. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. While mistakes can be upsetting, the important thing is that you were able to resolve the issue. Rather than dwelling on the error, I would suggest focusing your energy on learning from this experience. Consider what steps you could take to prevent similar incidents in the future, such as implementing better backup procedures or double-checking your work. When speaking with your manager, be upfront about what happened, explain the steps you've taken to address it, and emphasize your commitment to doing better going forward. Managers generally appreciate honesty and a proactive approach to problem-solving. With a clear plan in place, you can move forward productively.
case-196	PEACEFUL/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CONFUSED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility. For now, try not to dwell on the embarrassment. Take a deep breath, and remember that this ...
case-197	PEACEFUL/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/FEARFUL_DISTRICTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Accidents happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, which shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. Rather than worrying about your manager's reaction, I suggest focusing on what you learned from this experience. Think about how you can be more careful with important files going forward. When you meet with your manager, be honest about what happened, but also highlight the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize your commitment to doing your job well. With a calm, professional approach, this can be an opportunity ... case-198	PEACEFUL/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Accidents happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, which shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. Rather than worrying about your manager's reaction, I suggest focusing on what you learned from this experience. Think about how you can be more careful with important files going forward. You could even propose a system or process to help prevent similar mistakes in the future. Presenting it as a constructive solution rather than dwelling on the error itself may help. The main thing is that you resolved the ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-199	PEACEFUL/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, even to the best of us. The fact that you were able to fix it in a timely manner shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest focusing on the steps you took to resolve the issue efficiently. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your proactive approach. With a calm, professional demeanor, you can ...
case-200	PEACEFUL/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, even to the best of us. The best thing you can do now is to be upfront with your manager. Explain what happened, how you were able to resolve it, and any steps you'll take to prevent it from happening again. Managers generally appreciate honesty and accountability. With a calm, professional approach, I'm sure your manager will understand. In the meantime, try not to dwell on the mistake. Focus on the positive - that you were able to ...
case-201	PEACEFUL/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CURIOUS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront and honest about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue, and emphasize that you learned from the experience. Most managers will appreciate your transparency and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - focus on the positive that you were able to resolve it. With a clear, direct approach, I'm sure ...
case-202	PEACEFUL/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. I know it can be worrying to think about how your manager might react, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Mistakes happen, and the fact that you were able to fix it shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. I would suggest being upfront with your manager, explaining what happened and the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and it won't happen again. With a calm, professional approach, I'm sure your manager will appreciate your honesty and responsibility. The most important ... case-203	PEACEFUL/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be frustrating. Accidentally deleting an important file is a common mistake, even for experienced professionals. The important thing now is to focus on resolving the issue. Here are a few suggestions that may help: - Document the steps you took to recover the file and the time it took. This shows you took it seriously and worked diligently to fix it. - Speak to your manager proactively. Explain what happened, what you did to resolve it, and any measures you'll take to prevent it in the future. This demonstrates accountability. - Avoid dwelling on feelings of embarrassment. Instead, emphasize the positive - that you were able to recover the file and learn from the experience. The ... case-204	PEACEFUL/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, and I can see why you're worried about how your manager will react. The good news is that you were able to recover the file, which is the most important thing. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The best thing you can do now is be upfront with your manager, explain what happened, and let them know the steps you took to resolve it. Focusing on the solution rather than dwelling on the mistake is usually the wisest approach. I'm confident you can handle this professionally. Let me know ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-205	PEACEFUL/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is good. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell too much on the embarrassment - just focus ...
case-206	PEACEFUL/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is good. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront and honest about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency. Try not to dwell too much on the mistake itself - instead, emphasize the steps you took to fix it. With a clear, direct approach, I'm sure you can move past this ... case-207	PEACEFUL/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is good. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront and honest about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility. Try not to dwell too much on the embarrassment. Focus instead on moving ... case-208	PEACEFUL/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I suggest focusing on the positive - that you were able to fix the issue in a timely manner. When you speak with your manager, be upfront about what happened, explain the steps you took to resolve it, and emphasize that it won't happen again. Chances are, they'll appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Moving forward, you could look into ...
case-209	PEACEFUL/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/CURIOUS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really frustrating. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened, taking responsibility, and explaining the steps you took to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and it won't happen again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and proactive approach. Try not to dwell on it too much - focus ... case-210	PEACEFUL/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really frustrating. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened, taking responsibility, and explaining the steps you took to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and it won't happen again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and proactive approach. Try to stay calm and focus on finding a constructive ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-211	PEACEFUL/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/ CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this").	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The most constructive approach now is to focus on the steps you can take. I would suggest speaking honestly with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and emphasize your commitment to your work. Managers generally appreciate transparency and accountability. With a clear explanation, they may be more understanding than you expect. Going forward, consider implementing some safeguards, like regularly backing up critical files, to help prevent similar incidents. ...
case-212	PEACEFUL/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/ CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When you speak to your manager, focus on explaining what happened calmly and what you did to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try to stay grounded - you've got this.
case-213	PEACEFUL/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/ FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can feel really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed and worried about how your manager will react. The best thing is to be upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue, and focus on the positive - that you were able to recover the file. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. The important thing is that you were able to fix it. Just focus on moving forward in a ... case-214	PEACEFUL/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/ NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can feel upsetting. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and will be more careful going forward. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on feeling embarrassed - your manager understands ...
case-215	PEACEFUL/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/ CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a significant amount of time fixing it can be upsetting. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to resolve the issue. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I would suggest focusing on the positive - that you were able to recover the file and get it taken care of. When speaking with your manager, be honest about what happened, but also emphasize the steps you took to fix it. Chances are, they will appreciate your proactivity and responsibility in handling the ...
case-216	PEACEFUL/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/ ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Accidents happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, which shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. Rather than worrying about your manager's reaction, I suggest focusing on what you learned from this experience and how you can prevent similar mistakes in the future. Is there a way you could implement better backup procedures or double-check your work? Approaching your manager proactively with solutions rather than just the problem can go a long way. Remember, you are human and these things happen. Stay calm, focus on ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-217	PEACEFUL/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CURIOS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the most careful people. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the problem and the time it required. Focus on the solution rather than dwelling on the mistake. Your manager will likely appreciate your responsibility in addressing the issue promptly. Moving forward, you could also suggest ways to prevent similar incidents, such as implementing better backup ... case-218	PEACEFUL/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue and the time it required. Focus on the positive - that you were able to recover the file and get it working again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Try not to dwell on feeling embarrassed. Just communicate the facts clearly and professionally. The ...
case-219	PEACEFUL/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be stressful, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, even to the most careful people. The best approach now is to be upfront with your manager. Explain what happened, how you were able to recover the file, and the steps you've taken to prevent it from happening again. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and are committed to being more vigilant going forward. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling the issue. Moving forward, consider implementing some safeguards, like regularly backing up critical files or using version ... case-220	PEACEFUL/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a significant amount of time fixing it can be quite upsetting. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I would suggest focusing on documenting what happened and the steps you took to resolve the issue. That way, if your manager does ask about it, you can provide a clear explanation. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again in the future. With ...
case-221	PEACEFUL/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes a significant amount of time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the most careful of us. The best approach is to be upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to recover the file and the time it required. Focus on the positive - that you were able to resolve the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Going forward, you can discuss ways to prevent similar situations, but for now, try not to dwell on the ... case-222	PEACEFUL/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes a significant amount of time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the most careful people. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront and taking responsibility. Explain what happened, the steps you took to resolve it, and any measures you'll take to prevent similar issues in the future. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and proactive approach. Try not to dwell on feelings of embarrassment - focus on the positive that you were ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-223	PEACEFUL/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the most careful people. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the problem and the time it required. Focus on the solution rather than dwelling on the mistake. Your manager will likely appreciate your proactivity and responsibility in addressing the situation. With a calm, professional approach, this can be an opportunity to demonstrate your problem-solving skills. ...
case-224	PEACEFUL/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the most careful people. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront and taking responsibility. Explain what happened, the steps you took to fix it, and any measures you'll put in place to prevent it from happening again. Managers generally appreciate honesty and proactivity in these situations. With a calm, professional approach, this issue can likely be resolved without major consequences. The main thing is that the ... case-225	PEACEFUL/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CURIOUS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a significant amount of time fixing it can be really upsetting. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I would suggest focusing on the positive - that you were able to resolve the issue. If your manager does bring it up, I'd recommend being upfront and honest about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix it, and emphasize that you've learned from the experience. Most managers will ...
case-226	PEACEFUL/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes a lot of time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I would suggest focusing on being proactive. When you have a chance, have an open conversation with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve it, and reassure them that you've learned from the experience. Emphasize your commitment to your work and your desire to prevent similar issues ...
case-227	PEACEFUL/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this").	I understand this must be frustrating. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing now is to focus on the solution. Since you were able to fix the issue, that's the key thing. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve it, and emphasize that you learned from the experience. Managers generally appreciate honesty and proactivity in addressing problems. With a clear explanation, they may be more understanding than you expect. Moving forward, consider ways you could prevent similar issues, ... case-228	PEACEFUL/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really frustrating. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When you speak to your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened, taking responsibility, and explaining the steps you took to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and it won't happen again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and proactive approach. Try not to dwell on it too much - ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-229	PEACEFUL/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/ FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, and I can imagine you're feeling quite worried about how your manager will react. The good news is that you were able to recover the file, which is the most important thing. While it's understandable to feel embarrassed, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. My advice would be to have an open and honest conversation with your manager. Explain what happened, how you were able to resolve it, and any steps you'll take to prevent something similar in the future. Focusing on solutions rather than dwelling on the mistake is ...
case-230	PEACEFUL/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/ NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes a lot of time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue and the time it required. Focus on the positive - that you were able to recover the file and get it working again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Try not to dwell on feeling embarrassed. Just communicate clearly about what ...
case-231	PEACEFUL/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/ CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can be really upsetting. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I would suggest focusing on being proactive. When you have a chance, have an open conversation with your manager. Explain what happened, what steps you took to resolve it, and any measures you'll put in place to prevent it from happening again in the future. Showing that you took responsibility and learned from the experience ...
case-232	PEACEFUL/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/ ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand that must have been a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really frustrating. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I'm sure your manager will appreciate that you took the initiative to resolve the issue. Focus on the positive - that you were able to fix the problem efficiently. If your manager does bring it up, just explain what happened calmly and emphasize that you learned from the experience. With your diligence, I'm confident you'll be able to move forward productively. ... case-233	PEACEFUL/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATION ALIST/CURIOUS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about that situation at work. It can be really stressful when something like that happens, even if you were able to fix it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - we all make mistakes sometimes. The important thing is that you were able to resolve the issue. I'm sure your manager will appreciate that you took responsibility and got it sorted out. If you're still feeling worried, you could consider having a brief, honest conversation with them about what happened. But try not to dwell on it too much. Focus on the positive that you were able to fix the problem.
case-234	PEACEFUL/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATION ALIST/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I'm sorry to hear you had that frustrating experience at work. It's understandable to feel embarrassed when something like that happens, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These kinds of mistakes can happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, which shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. I'm sure your manager will appreciate that you took the initiative to resolve the problem. Try not to dwell on it too much - just focus on doing your best going forward. If you're still feeling uneasy, you could consider having a brief, honest conversation with your manager about what happened. But I'm confident they'll understand, and that this ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-235	PEACEFUL/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATION ALIST/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this").	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be stressful, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the problem and reassure them that it won't happen again. Emphasize the lessons you've learned and your commitment to being more careful in the future. Managers generally appreciate honesty and a proactive approach to addressing mistakes. Moving forward, you could consider implementing some extra safeguards, like regularly ... case-236	PEACEFUL/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATION ALIST/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really frustrating. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. ...
case-237	PEACEFUL/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATION ALIST/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can definitely feel embarrassing. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the most careful people. The best thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Most managers will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - the ... case-238	PEACEFUL/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATION ALIST/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can definitely feel embarrassing. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Try not to dwell on the mistake itself - instead, emphasize the steps you took to fix it. With a calm, professional approach, this should ...
case-239	PEACEFUL/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATION ALIST/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes a lot of time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the most careful people. The best thing is that you were able to fix the issue. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve it, and emphasize that you learned from the experience. Managers generally appreciate honesty and responsibility. With a calm, professional approach, this likely won't be as big of a deal as you're worried it might be. Focus on moving forward productively.
case-240	PEACEFUL/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATION ALIST/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I'm sorry to hear you had that frustrating experience at work. It's understandable to feel embarrassed when something like that happens, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These kinds of mistakes can happen, even to the most careful people. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, which shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I'd suggest focusing on having an open and honest conversation with them. Explain what happened, what you learned, and the steps you took to resolve it. Chances are, they'll appreciate your transparency and responsibility in handling the situation. Many managers understand that occasional mistakes are part of the learning process. ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-241	PEACEFUL/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/CURIOUS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be upsetting, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the most careful of us. The best approach is to be upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to recover the file and the time it required. Focus on the actions you took to resolve the issue, rather than dwelling on the mistake itself. Your manager will likely appreciate your proactive approach and owning up to the situation. Moving forward, you could consider implementing some additional safeguards, like regularly backing up critical files, to help prevent similar incidents. But for now, the ... case-242	PEACEFUL/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be upsetting, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the most careful of us. The best approach is to be upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to recover the file and the time it required. Focus on the actions you took to resolve the issue, rather than dwelling on the mistake itself. Your manager will likely appreciate your proactive approach and owning up to the situation. Moving forward, you could consider implementing some additional safeguards, like regularly backing up critical files, to help prevent similar incidents. But for now, the ...
case-243	PEACEFUL/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 4. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be stressful, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. From a practical standpoint, the best approach is to be upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to recover the file and the time it required. Focus on the actions you took to resolve the issue efficiently. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility in addressing the problem. Going forward, consider implementing some safeguards to prevent similar incidents, such as regularly backing up critical files or using version control. This can help mitigate the risk of data loss in the future. The key is to remain calm and professional ... case-244	PEACEFUL/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/CONFUSED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend significant time fixing it can be quite upsetting. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the most careful of us. The best approach now is to be proactive. I would suggest speaking directly with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and objectively, and focus on the steps you took to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have implemented measures to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility. Going forward, I recommend reviewing your file backup and recovery processes to identify any ...
case-245	PEACEFUL/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/FEELING_UNTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. As a data-driven analyst, I would suggest focusing on the practical next steps. First, I would recommend documenting what happened - the steps you took to resolve the issue and the time it took. This will help provide context if you need to discuss it with your manager. Moving forward, I would also recommend reviewing your file management processes to identify any areas for improvement. Are there ways you can implement better backup or version control systems to prevent this from happening again? Taking a proactive, solutions-oriented approach will likely be appreciated. The most important thing is that you were able to resolve the issue. I would advise against dwelling on feelings ... case-246	PEACEFUL/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be upsetting, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the most careful people. The best approach is to be upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to recover the file and the time it required. Focus on the actions you took to resolve the issue efficiently. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility in addressing the problem. Moving forward, you could consider implementing some additional safeguards, like regularly backing up critical files, to help prevent similar incidents. But for now, the most important thing is communicating openly with your ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-247	PEACEFUL/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be upsetting, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the most careful people. The best approach is to be upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to recover the file and the time it required. Focus on the actions you took to resolve the issue efficiently. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility in addressing the problem. Moving forward, consider implementing some safeguards, like regularly backing up critical files, to help prevent similar incidents. But for now, try not to dwell on the mistake. Address it professionally with your ... case-248	PEACEFUL/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but it's good that you were able to recover it. Rather than worrying about your manager's reaction, I would suggest focusing on the practical next steps. First, document what happened and the steps you took to resolve the issue. This will show your manager that you took responsibility and worked diligently to fix the problem. Second, consider reaching out to your manager proactively to explain the situation. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Propose any process improvements that could help avoid similar issues in the future. The key is ... case-249	PEACEFUL/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/CURIOS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes a lot of time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I suggest focusing on being proactive. When you have a chance, have an open conversation with them about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue and any measures you'll take to prevent it from happening again in the future. Managers generally appreciate honesty and a willingness to learn from mistakes. With the right approach, this ... case-250	PEACEFUL/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand that must have been a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really frustrating. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When you speak to your manager, I'd suggest focusing on what you learned from the experience and the steps you took to resolve the issue efficiently. Emphasize your commitment to doing good work. With a calm, professional approach, I'm sure you can move past this. The main thing is that the problem was resolved, and that's ... case-251	PEACEFUL/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be stressful, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, even to the best of us. The most constructive approach now is to focus on the solution. I would suggest speaking honestly with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to recover the file and the measures you'll take to prevent similar issues in the future. Managers generally appreciate transparency and a proactive approach to resolving problems. Going forward, you could look into setting up automatic backups or version control for critical files. This can help minimize the impact of accidental ... case-252	PEACEFUL/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really frustrating. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I would suggest focusing on what you learned from this experience and how you can prevent something similar from happening in the future. Perhaps there are steps you can take to better back up your work or be more careful with file management. Bringing those ideas to your manager could even show your ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-253	PEACEFUL/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/ FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, and I can imagine you're feeling quite worried about how your manager will react. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager, explaining what happened and the steps you took to resolve it. Honesty and taking responsibility are often the best approach in these situations. With a calm, professional demeanor, I'm sure you can get through this. The main thing is that the issue has been resolved. Try to focus on that rather than dwelling on the ... case-254	PEACEFUL/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/ NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - learn from this experience, and move forward. You've got this.
case-255	PEACEFUL/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/ CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes a lot of time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I suggest focusing on being proactive. When you have a chance, have an open conversation with them about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue, and reassure them that you've learned from this experience. Emphasize your commitment to being more careful going forward. With a calm, solutions-oriented approach, your manager is likely to appreciate your ... case-256	PEACEFUL/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/ ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I'm sorry to hear you had that frustrating experience at work. Accidentally deleting an important file can definitely be stressful, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. I know it's easy to worry about what your manager might think, but try not to assume the worst. Many managers understand that these kinds of mistakes can happen, and will likely appreciate that you were able to resolve the issue efficiently. If you feel comfortable, you could even proactively mention it to your manager and explain how you were able to fix it. That shows ...
case-257	LOVING/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CURIOS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take.	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, which shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. Rather than worrying about your manager's reaction, I suggest focusing on what you learned from this experience. Think about how you can be more careful with important files going forward. You could even propose a process improvement to help prevent similar mistakes. Presenting it as a learning opportunity rather than a failure can go a long way. For now, take a deep breath. You got through this ... case-258	LOVING/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take.	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, which shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I suggest focusing on what you can control. When you speak to your manager, be honest about what happened, explain the steps you took to resolve it, and emphasize that you learned from the experience. Approach it as an opportunity to demonstrate your accountability and commitment to doing good work. With that mindset, I think your manager will ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-259	LOVING/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 5. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Rather than dwelling on the mistake, I would suggest focusing on what you can do moving forward. First, I would recommend documenting the steps you took to recover the file, in case your manager has any questions. This shows you took proactive measures to resolve the issue. Additionally, you could consider speaking to your manager directly and explaining what happened - they may appreciate your transparency. Going forward, you may want to review your file backup and recovery processes to see if there are any improvements that could be made to prevent ...
case-260	LOVING/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility. In the meantime, try not to dwell on the mistake. Learn what you can from it, and ...
case-261	LOVING/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is a testament to your skills and diligence. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue and the time it required. Focus on the positive - that you were able to fix the problem efficiently. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling the situation. Moving forward, you could consider implementing some extra safeguards, like regularly backing ... case-262	LOVING/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, which shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I suggest focusing on what you can control. When you have a chance, have an open and honest conversation with your manager. Explain what happened, how you resolved it, and what you've learned. Emphasize your commitment to your work and your desire to prevent similar issues in the future. With a constructive approach, your manager is likely to ...
case-263	LOVING/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Accidents happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, which shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. Rather than worrying about your manager's reaction, I suggest focusing on what you learned from this experience. Think about how you can be more careful with important files going forward. You could even propose a system or process to prevent similar mistakes in the future. Presenting it as a learning opportunity rather than a failure can go a long way. Remember, your manager is likely more concerned with how ...
case-264	LOVING/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The best thing you can do now is to be upfront with your manager. Explain what happened, how you were able to fix it, and any steps you'll take to prevent it from happening again. Managers generally appreciate honesty and accountability. With a little explanation, I'm sure they'll understand it was an honest mistake. In the meantime, try not to dwell on it too much. Focus on the positive - you ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-265	LOVING/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CURIOS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to fix it. I know it can be worrying to think about how your manager might react, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Mistakes happen, and the fact that you were able to resolve the issue shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. The best thing to do now is to be upfront with your manager, explain what happened, and focus on the steps you took to address it. I'm confident you can handle this professionally. Let me know if you need any other advice or support.
case-266	LOVING/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to fix it. I know it can be worrying to think about how your manager might react, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Mistakes happen, and the fact that you were able to resolve the issue shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. The best thing to do now is to be upfront with your manager, explain what happened, and focus on the steps you took to address it. I'm confident you'll be able to handle this professionally. Let me know if you need any other advice or support.
case-267	LOVING/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be frustrating. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, the best thing you can do now is to be upfront with your manager. Explain what happened, how you were able to recover the file, and what steps you'll take to prevent this from happening again. Managers generally appreciate honesty and accountability. Focus on the solution rather than dwelling on the mistake. With a clear plan going forward, your manager is more likely to see this as a learning opportunity rather than a major issue. The key is to address it proactively.
case-268	LOVING/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really upsetting. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and it won't happen again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - just focus on moving forward ... case-269	LOVING/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really frustrating. However, I would encourage you not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to resolve the issue. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I would suggest focusing on being proactive. When you have a chance, I would recommend speaking to your manager directly, explaining what happened, and letting them know the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Managers generally appreciate ...
case-270	LOVING/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to fix it. I know it can be worrying to think about how your manager might react, but try not to assume the worst. The best thing to do is be upfront about what happened, explain how you resolved the issue, and focus on the positive that you were able to recover the file. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Going forward, you can learn from this experience and be more cautious, but don't be too hard on yourself. Mistakes happen, and the main thing is that ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-271	LOVING/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and reassure them that it won't happen again. Focus on the solution rather than dwelling on the mistake. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in resolving the problem. The key is to stay calm and professional. You've got this. case-272	LOVING/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The best approach now is to be upfront with your manager. Explain what happened, how you were able to fix it, and what you've learned from the experience. Emphasize that it won't happen again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in resolving the issue. Focus on the positive - that you were able to recover the file and learn from this experience. With a clear, direct approach, I'm ... case-273	LOVING/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/CURIOUS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can feel really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened, taking responsibility, and focusing on the steps you took to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and it won't happen again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and proactive approach. Try to stay calm and grounded - you've got ... case-274	LOVING/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can feel really upsetting. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I'm sure your manager will appreciate that you took the time to resolve the issue thoroughly. Going forward, you could consider implementing some extra safeguards to prevent accidental deletions, but for now, try to stay calm. This is a learning experience, and your manager will likely understand. You've got this. case-275	LOVING/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing now is to focus on the steps you took to fix it. Rather than worrying about your manager's reaction, I would suggest being proactive. When you have a chance, have an open and honest conversation with them. Explain what happened, the steps you took to resolve it, and any measures you'll put in place to prevent it from happening again in the future. Managers generally appreciate transparency and accountability. Approaching it this way ... case-276	LOVING/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can feel really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When speaking to your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened, taking responsibility, and explaining the steps you took to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and it won't happen again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and diligence in fixing the problem. Try to stay calm and focus on ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-277	LOVING/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can feel really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed and worried about how your manager will react. The best thing is to be upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue and reassure them that it won't happen again. Focus on the solution rather than dwelling on the mistake. Your manager will likely appreciate your responsibility in addressing the problem. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. The important thing is that you were able to fix it. Just stay calm and professional ... case-278	LOVING/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can feel really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened, taking responsibility, and focusing on the steps you took to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and it won't happen again. With a calm, professional approach, your manager is likely to appreciate your honesty and problem-solving skills. Try not to ...
case-279	LOVING/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can feel really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I suggest focusing on being proactive. When you have a chance, have an open conversation with your manager. Explain what happened, what you did to resolve it, and any steps you'll take to prevent similar issues in the future. Showing that you took responsibility and found a solution ... case-280	LOVING/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can feel really upsetting. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I suggest focusing on what you learned from this experience. Think about how you can be more careful with important files going forward. You could also consider proactively speaking to your manager, explaining what happened and what steps you've taken to prevent it in the future. Approaching it this way shows responsibility and a ... case-281	LOVING/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CURIOUS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes a lot of time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the most careful people. The best thing is that you were able to fix the issue. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve it and the time it required. Focus on the positive - that you were able to recover the file and get things back on track. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Try not to dwell ... case-282	LOVING/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can definitely feel embarrassing, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I would suggest focusing on being proactive. When you have a chance, have an open conversation with your manager. Explain what happened, how you resolved it, and any steps you're taking to prevent it from happening again in the future. Managers generally appreciate honesty and accountability. With a calm, professional approach, this could even be ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-283	LOVING/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. The best approach here is to be upfront with your manager. Explain what happened, how you were able to recover the file, and the steps you've taken to ensure it doesn't happen again. Focus on the resolution and what you've learned, rather than dwelling on the mistake itself. Managers generally appreciate honesty and proactivity in addressing issues. Going forward, consider implementing some safeguards, like regularly backing up critical files or using version control, to reduce the risk of this happening again. But don't be too hard on yourself - these things can happen, and ... case-284	LOVING/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a significant amount of time fixing it can be quite upsetting. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to resolve the issue. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I would suggest focusing on being proactive. When you have a chance, have an open conversation with your manager. Explain what happened, what steps you took to fix it, and any measures you'll put in place to prevent it from happening again in the future. Demonstrating your problem-solving skills and commitment to your ... case-285	LOVING/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can be really frustrating. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Most managers will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling the situation. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - just focus ... case-286	LOVING/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes a significant amount of time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the most careful people. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront and taking responsibility. Explain what happened, the steps you took to resolve it, and any measures you'll take to prevent it from happening again in the future. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and proactive approach. Try not to dwell on feelings of embarrassment - focus on demonstrating your competence ... case-287	LOVING/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the most careful people. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the problem and the time it required. Focus on the actions you took, rather than dwelling on the mistake itself. Your manager will likely appreciate your proactivity and responsibility in addressing the situation. Moving forward, you could consider implementing some safeguards, like regularly backing up ... case-288	LOVING/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but it's good that you were able to recover it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes, even to the most careful people. The best thing is that you were able to fix the issue. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve it and reassure them that it won't happen again. Chances are they'll appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Moving forward, you could look into setting up automatic backups or version control to help prevent data loss. But for now, try ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-289	LOVING/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CURIOUS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can definitely feel embarrassing. However, I would encourage you not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file and resolve the issue. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I would suggest focusing on being proactive. When you have a chance, I would recommend speaking to your manager directly, explaining what happened, and letting them know the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have put measures in place to ...
case-290	LOVING/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can definitely feel embarrassing. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the mistake - just ...
case-291	LOVING/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be stressful, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, even to the best of us. The most constructive approach now is to focus on the solution. I would suggest speaking honestly with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to recover the file and the measures you'll take to prevent similar issues in the future. Emphasizing your proactive problem-solving approach may help mitigate any concerns. Moving forward, you could also look into data backup and recovery processes at your workplace to reduce the risk of this happening again. But for ...
case-292	LOVING/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really frustrating. I know you're worried about what your manager will think, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager, explain what happened, and focus on the steps you took to resolve the issue. They'll likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Going forward, you could look into ways to better back up your work to prevent this from happening again. But ...
case-293	LOVING/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really frustrating. However, I would encourage you not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to resolve the issue. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I would suggest focusing on being proactive. When you have a chance, I would recommend speaking to your manager directly, explaining what happened, and letting them know the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Managers generally appreciate ... case-294	LOVING/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really frustrating. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Going forward, you could look into ways to better backup or version control important files to prevent this from happening again. But for now, ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-295	LOVING/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but it sounds like you were able to recover it, which is good. As for your manager, the best approach is to be upfront and take responsibility. Explain what happened calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and proactivity. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. Just be transparent about it, and I'm sure your manager will understand.
case-296	LOVING/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but it sounds like you were able to recover it, which is good. I know it can be worrying to think about how your manager might react, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. I'm sure your manager will appreciate your diligence in resolving the problem. Going forward, you could consider implementing some extra safeguards to prevent accidental deletions, but for now, try not to dwell on it too much. You got through this challenge, and that's what ...
case-297	LOVING/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIST/CURIOUS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about that situation at work. It can be really stressful when something like that happens, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Accidents happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate that you took responsibility and resolved the problem. I know it's not easy, but try not to dwell on it too much. Just focus on doing your best going forward. Let me know if there's anything else I can do to help.
case-298	LOVING/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIST/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about that situation at work. It can be really stressful when something like that happens, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Accidents happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate that you took responsibility and resolved the problem. I'm sure they'll understand it was an honest mistake. The best thing is to stay calm, explain what happened, and focus on the solution rather than dwelling on the mistake. You've got this!
case-299	LOVING/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIST/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be frustrating. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix it. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue and the time it required. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your proactive approach and owning up to the mistake. Moving forward, consider implementing some safeguards, like regularly backing up ...
case-300	LOVING/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIST/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really frustrating. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The most important thing now is to focus on resolving the issue. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to recover the file and the time it required. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling the situation. ...
case-301	LOVING/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIST/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really frustrating. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-302	LOVING/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONAL/ST/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell too much on the embarrassment - these things happen, and your manager is likely more concerned with the end result than the initial mistake. Just ...
case-303	LOVING/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONAL/ST/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can definitely feel embarrassing. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Try not to dwell on the mistake itself - instead, emphasize the steps you took to fix it. With a calm, professional approach, this should ...
case-304	LOVING/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONAL/ST/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I'm sorry to hear you had that frustrating experience at work. It's understandable to feel embarrassed when something like that happens, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things can happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, which shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I'd suggest focusing on the positive - that you were able to resolve the problem efficiently. When you speak with your manager, be upfront about what happened, but also highlight the steps you took to address it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have processes in place to prevent similar ...
case-305	LOVING/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/CURIOS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. From an analytical perspective, the best approach here is to be proactive and transparent with your manager. I would suggest scheduling a brief meeting to explain what happened, the steps you took to fix it, and any measures you've put in place to prevent similar issues in the future. Focusing the conversation on solutions rather than dwelling on the mistake itself can help demonstrate your professionalism and commitment to your work. Remember, mistakes happen, and what's most important is how you respond to them. Approaching this constructively is likely to be viewed more positively ... case-306	LOVING/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. While your manager may have some questions, try not to be too hard on yourself. The best thing to do now is to focus on documenting what happened and the steps you took to resolve it. That way, you can have a constructive conversation with your manager about the incident and demonstrate your problem-solving skills. Moving forward, consider implementing some additional safeguards or backup procedures to help prevent similar issues. The main thing is that you were able to recover the file - that shows your dedication and ability to ...
case-307	LOVING/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 4. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. From a practical standpoint, I would suggest documenting the steps you took to recover the file, including the time it took. That way, if your manager has any questions, you can provide a clear explanation of what happened and the actions you took to resolve it. Going forward, you may want to review your file management processes to see if there are any steps you can take to prevent similar issues in the future, such as setting up automatic backups or implementing version control. But for now, focus on providing your manager ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-308	LOVING/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend significant time fixing it can be quite upsetting. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The most constructive approach now is to focus on next steps. I would suggest speaking openly with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue and any measures you've put in place to prevent it from recurring. Emphasize your commitment to your work and your willingness to learn from this experience. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility. Going forward, consider implementing some additional safeguards, like regularly backing up ...
case-309	LOVING/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. As a data-driven analyst, my recommendation would be to focus on the practical next steps. First, I suggest documenting what happened - the steps you took to resolve the issue and the time it took. This will help provide context if you need to discuss it with your manager. Next, I would recommend proactively reaching out to your manager to explain the situation. Emphasize that you were able to recover the file and resolve the issue, and highlight the steps you've taken to prevent it from happening again. Presenting the facts in a calm, professional manner is likely the best approach. The most important thing is to learn from this experience and ...
case-310	LOVING/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can be quite upsetting. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the most careful people. The best thing to do now is to be proactive. I would suggest speaking honestly with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue and the measures you'll put in place to prevent it from happening again. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and are committed to doing your work diligently going forward. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility. Moving forward, consider implementing some safeguards, like regularly ...
case-311	LOVING/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. From an analytical perspective, the best approach here is to be proactive and transparent with your manager. I would suggest scheduling a brief meeting to explain what happened, the steps you took to fix it, and any measures you've put in place to prevent similar issues in the future. Focusing the conversation on solutions rather than dwelling on the mistake itself can help demonstrate your professionalism and commitment to your work. Remember, mistakes happen, and how you handle them is often more important than the mistake itself. Approaching this calmly and constructively is likely ...
case-312	LOVING/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. As a data-driven analyst, my recommendation would be to focus on the practical next steps. First, I suggest documenting what happened - the steps you took to resolve the issue and the time it took. This will help provide context for your manager. Next, I would recommend proactively reaching out to your manager to explain the situation. Emphasize that you were able to recover the file and get things back on track. Propose any process improvements that could prevent similar issues in the future. This shows initiative and a commitment to doing your job well. The key is to remain calm and professional. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency ... case-313	LOVING/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/CURIIOUS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes a lot of time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I'd suggest focusing on being proactive. When you have a chance, have an open conversation with them about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue, and reassure them that you've learned from this experience. Chances are, they'll appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. The key is to stay calm and professional. In the ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-314	LOVING/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront and honest about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix it, and emphasize that you learned from the experience. Most managers will appreciate your transparency and responsibility in handling the issue. With a little time and perspective, I'm sure this will blow over. Just focus on doing great work going forward. You've got this! case-315	LOVING/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, even if it took some time. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I'd suggest focusing on what you can do going forward. Is there a way you can implement better backup or version control processes to prevent this from happening again? Or perhaps you could speak to your manager proactively and explain what happened, along with the steps you're taking to ensure it doesn't recur. Approaching it constructively is likely to be better received than dwelling on the mistake itself. ... case-316	LOVING/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really frustrating. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When speaking to your manager, I'd suggest being upfront about what happened, taking responsibility, and focusing on the steps you took to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and it won't happen again. With a calm, professional approach, your manager will likely appreciate your transparency. Try not to dwell on it too much ... case-317	LOVING/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, and I can imagine you're feeling quite worried about how your manager will react. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I'm sure your manager will appreciate that you took the initiative to fix the issue. The best thing you can do now is to learn from this experience and be more cautious with important files going forward. But don't dwell on it too much - you got through this challenge, and that's what matters. Just focus on doing your best work moving ahead. case-318	LOVING/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - learn from this experience, and move forward. You've got this. case-319	LOVING/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - just focus on moving ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-320	LOVING/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about that situation at work. It can be really stressful when something like that happens, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Accidents happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate that you took responsibility and resolved the problem efficiently. Going forward, you could consider setting up some extra safeguards or backups to help prevent similar situations. But for now, try not to dwell on it too much. You got through this challenge, and that's what matters most. case-321	SAD/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CURIOUS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and upsetting situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, and I can imagine you're feeling quite worried about how your manager will respond. The good news is that you were able to recover the file, which is the most important thing. Rather than dwelling on the mistake, I would encourage you to focus on the positive - that you were able to fix it and get the work done. When speaking to your manager, I'd suggest being upfront about what happened, taking responsibility, and outlining the steps you've taken to ensure it doesn't happen again. Emphasize your commitment to your work and your desire to learn from this experience. With a ... case-322	SAD/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a lot of time to fix. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The most important thing now is to focus on resolving the situation. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to recover the file and the time it required. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility. In the meantime, try ... case-323	SAD/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 5. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The most constructive approach now is to focus on the steps you can take. I would suggest being proactive and having an open conversation with your manager. Explain what happened, the steps you took to fix it, and any measures you'll put in place to prevent similar issues in the future. Managers generally appreciate honesty and accountability. With a clear plan, you can demonstrate your commitment to doing better going forward. In the meantime, try not ... case-324	SAD/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be really stressful and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is a common mistake, and it's great that you were able to fix it, even though it took some time. I know it can be hard not to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. The important thing is that you resolved the issue. When you talk to your manager, focus on explaining what happened and the steps you took to address it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have processes in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling the situation. Take a deep breath - you've got this. case-325	SAD/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a very stressful situation for you. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can be really upsetting. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When you speak to your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain that it was an accident and that you were able to resolve the issue. Focus on what you learned from the experience and how you'll be more careful going forward. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell too much ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-326	SAD/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, even to the best of us. The fact that you were able to fix it in a timely manner shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I would suggest focusing on the positive - that you were able to resolve the issue efficiently. When you speak with your manager, be upfront about what happened, but also highlight the steps you took to rectify it. Emphasize that you learned from the ... case-327	SAD/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, even to the best of us. The fact that you were able to fix it in a timely manner shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. When speaking to your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened, but also emphasize the steps you took to resolve the issue efficiently. Highlight that you learned from this experience and have implemented safeguards to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and proactiveness. With a ... case-328	SAD/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/ENTHUSIASM_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about that situation at work. It's understandable to feel that way, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Accidents happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. I know it can be stressful worrying about how your manager will react, but try to stay positive. Focus on the fact that you resolved the problem efficiently, which shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. When you speak to your manager, be upfront about what happened, but also highlight how you were able to address it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and will be more careful going forward. Your manager is likely more concerned with how ... case-329	SAD/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CURIOUS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really stressful. I know you're worried about what your manager will think, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager, explain what happened, and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. They'll likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the mistake too much - learn from it, and move forward. You've got this. case-330	SAD/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it is a difficult situation. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The most important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Going forward, you can learn from this experience and be more cautious with important files. But don't dwell on the ... case-331	SAD/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is a common mistake, even for experienced professionals. The important thing now is to focus on resolving the issue. Here are a few suggestions that may help: First, document what happened - when you realized the file was deleted, the steps you took to recover it, and how long it took. This shows you took it seriously and worked diligently to fix it. Second, speak to your manager proactively. Explain what happened, what you did to resolve it, and any steps you'll take to prevent it in the future. Emphasize your commitment to your work and that this was an isolated incident. Most managers understand these things ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-332	SAD/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really stressful for you. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can be really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When you talk to your manager, focus on explaining what happened and the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have processes in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling the situation. Try not to dwell on the mistake - just ...
case-333	SAD/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really stressful for you. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can be really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When you talk to your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened, take responsibility, and let them know the steps you took to resolve the issue. Emphasize that it won't happen again. Managers generally appreciate honesty and proactiveness in these situations. Try not to dwell on it too much - learn from this experience and move forward. ...
case-334	SAD/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and upsetting situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really stressful. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The most important thing now is to focus on resolving the issue. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix it and reassure them that it won't happen again. Chances are, they'll appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Moving forward, you could look into ways to better safeguard important files, like setting up automatic ...
case-335	SAD/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this is a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be stressful, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes. The important thing is that you were able to fix it, even if it took some time. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you resolved the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - just focus on the solution. With a clear, direct approach, this can be a learning experience rather than something to worry about.
case-336	SAD/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is a common mistake, and it's understandable to feel embarrassed about it. The good news is that you were able to fix it, even if it took some time. When speaking to your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain that you made a mistake, but that you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and will be more careful going forward. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling the situation. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to ...
case-337	SAD/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/CURIOUS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a very stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When speaking to your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened, taking responsibility, and explaining the steps you took to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and it won't happen again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and diligence in fixing the problem. Try to stay calm and focus ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-338	SAD/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be really stressful and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really frustrating. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When you talk to your manager, focus on explaining what happened and the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and will be more careful going forward. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling the situation. Try to stay calm and remember that one mistake doesn't ...
case-339	SAD/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing now is to focus on resolving the issue as best you can. My advice would be to have an open and honest conversation with your manager. Explain what happened, how you were able to recover the file, and the steps you're taking to prevent it from happening again. Managers generally appreciate transparency and accountability. They may even have suggestions to help you avoid similar issues in the future. In the meantime, try not to ...
case-340	SAD/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be really stressful and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really frustrating. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When you talk to your manager, focus on explaining what happened and the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have processes in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling the situation. Try to stay calm and remember ...
case-341	SAD/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a very stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When speaking to your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened, taking responsibility, and explaining the steps you took to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and it won't happen again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and diligence in fixing the problem. Try to stay calm and focus ...
case-342	SAD/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a very stressful situation. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Accidents happen, even with important work tasks. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, which shows your dedication. I would suggest focusing on the positive - that you resolved the problem efficiently. When speaking to your manager, be honest but also emphasize the steps you took to address it. They will likely appreciate your proactivity. For now, try to take some deep breaths and remind yourself that this is a temporary setback. You've got this.
case-343	SAD/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a very stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When speaking to your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility. Try not ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-344	SAD/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about the file issue at work. That must have been really stressful having to spend so much time fixing it. It's understandable to feel worried about how your manager will react. The important thing is that you were able to resolve the problem, even if it took some time. Mistakes happen, and the best thing is that you were able to address it. I know it's not easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Focus on the fact that you handled it responsibly. When you talk to your manager, be upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix it, and emphasize that you learned from the experience. ...
case-345	SAD/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CURIIOUS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix it. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I would suggest being upfront and transparent. Explain what happened calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Going forward, you could also suggest ways to prevent similar incidents, like implementing better backup procedures. The key is to stay professional ... case-346	SAD/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes a lot of time and effort to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront and taking responsibility. Explain what happened, the steps you took to resolve it, and any measures you'll take to prevent it from happening again in the future. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and proactive approach. Try not to dwell on feelings of embarrassment - focus on demonstrating your ...
case-347	SAD/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this").	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. The best approach here is to be upfront with your manager. Explain what happened, how you were able to recover the file, and the steps you've taken to ensure it doesn't happen again. Focus on the solutions and learnings, rather than dwelling on the mistake itself. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility. Going forward, consider implementing some safeguards, like regularly backing up critical files or using version control. That can help prevent similar issues in the future. For now, try not to be too hard on yourself - mistakes happen, and ...
case-348	SAD/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a very stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can be really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the most careful people. The best thing to do now is to be upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the mistake itself. Focus on moving ...
case-349	SAD/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a very stressful situation for you. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can be really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the most careful people. The best thing to do now is to be upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell too much on the mistake ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-350	SAD/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix it. When speaking to your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue and the time it required. Focus on the positive - that you were able to recover the file and get it working again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Try not to dwell on feelings of embarrassment. ... case-351	SAD/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the most careful people. The important thing is that you were able to fix it. When speaking to your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue and the time it required. Focus on the actions you took, rather than dwelling on the mistake itself. Your manager will likely appreciate your proactivity and transparency. With a calm, professional approach, this can be an opportunity to demonstrate your problem-solving skills. The key ...
case-352	SAD/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, and I can see why you're feeling embarrassed about it. However, try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is a testament to your skills and diligence. When speaking to your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and the time it required. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your ...
case-353	SAD/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CURIUS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about that situation at work. It can be really stressful when something like that happens, even if you were able to fix it. I know it's not easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Mistakes happen, and the important thing is that you were able to resolve it. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to address the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - just focus on moving forward in a constructive way.
case-354	SAD/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about that situation at work. It can be really stressful when something like that happens, even if you were able to fix it. I know it's not easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Mistakes happen, and the important thing is that you were able to resolve it. Your manager will likely appreciate that you took responsibility and got it sorted out. Just focus on doing your best going forward. I'm here if you need any other support.
case-355	SAD/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this").	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The most constructive approach now is to focus on the steps you can take. I would suggest being proactive and having an open conversation with your manager. Explain what happened, the steps you took to fix it, and any measures you'll put in place to prevent similar issues in the future. Managers generally appreciate honesty and a willingness to learn from mistakes. With a clear plan, you can move forward productively. In the meantime, try not ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-356	SAD/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about the file issue at work. That must have been really stressful having to spend so much time fixing it. I can understand why you're worried about what your manager will think. The important thing is that you were able to resolve the problem, even if it took some time. Try not to be too hard on yourself - mistakes happen, and the main thing is that you were able to get it sorted out. If you're worried about talking to your manager, I'd suggest being upfront about what happened and focusing on the steps you took to fix it. They'll likely appreciate your honesty. In the meantime, try not to dwell on ...
case-357	SAD/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really stressful and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is a common mistake, and it's understandable to feel embarrassed about it. The important thing is that you were able to fix it, even though it took time. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain that you made a mistake, but that you were able to resolve the issue. Focus on the steps you took to fix it, rather than dwelling on the mistake itself. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, and the main thing is that you were able to resolve ...
case-358	SAD/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, and I can see why you're worried about how your manager will react. The good news is that you were able to recover the file, even if it took some time. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. The best thing you can do now is be upfront with your manager, explain what happened, and let them know the steps you took to resolve it. Honesty and taking responsibility are often appreciated. I'm sure your manager will understand, and the important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. Try not to dwell on ...
case-359	SAD/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can definitely feel embarrassing. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the mistake - focus ...
case-360	SAD/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about that situation at work. It can be really stressful when something like that happens, even if you were able to fix it. I know it's not easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, and the important thing is that you were able to resolve it. I'm sure your manager will appreciate that you took the initiative to fix the problem. If you're worried about how they might react, you could consider having an open conversation with them about it. Explain what happened, how you resolved it, and any steps you'll take to prevent it from happening again in the future. Showing that proactive approach can ...
case-361	SAD/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIST/CURIIOUS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about that situation at work. It can be really stressful when something like that happens, even if you were able to fix it. It's understandable to feel worried about how your manager might react. The important thing is that you were able to resolve the issue, even if it took some time. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. I'm sure your manager will appreciate that you were able to get it sorted out. Why don't you take a deep breath and try not to dwell on it too much? I'm here if you need someone to talk to.
case-362	SAD/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIST/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about that situation at work. It can be really stressful when something like that happens, even if you were able to fix it. It's understandable to feel worried about how your manager might react. The important thing is that you were able to resolve the issue. Try not to be too hard on yourself - mistakes happen, and the main thing is that you were able to address it. I'm sure your manager will appreciate that you took responsibility and got it sorted out. Just focus on doing your best going forward. Let me know if there's anything else I can do to help.

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-363	SAD/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIST/C AUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this").	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The most important thing now is to focus on resolving the issue. Have you been able to recover the file? If not, I'd suggest speaking with your manager transparently about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix it and reassure them that it won't happen again. Managers generally appreciate honesty and accountability. In the future, you may want to consider implementing some safeguards, like regularly backing up important files or using version control. But for ...
case-364	SAD/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIST/C ONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about the file issue at work. That must have been really stressful having to spend so much time fixing it. I can understand why you're worried about what your manager will think. The best thing is to be upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you resolved the problem. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - mistakes happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. Just focus on learning from this experience going forward.
case-365	SAD/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIST/F EARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about that situation at work. It can be really stressful when something like that happens, even if you were able to fix it. I know it's not easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Mistakes happen, and the important thing is that you were able to resolve it. Your manager will likely appreciate that you took responsibility and got it sorted out. Just focus on doing your best going forward. If you're still feeling anxious about it, you could consider talking to your manager directly to get it off your chest. But try not to dwell on it too much. I'm sure it will blow over soon.
case-366	SAD/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIST/N EUTRAL_UNDECIDED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about that situation at work. It can be really stressful when something like that happens, even if you were able to fix it. It's understandable to feel worried about how your manager might react. The important thing is that you were able to resolve the issue. Try not to be too hard on yourself - mistakes happen, and the main thing is that you were able to address it. If you're still feeling anxious, you could consider speaking to your manager proactively about what happened. They may appreciate your transparency. In the meantime, try not to dwell on it too much. Focus on the positive that you were able to fix the problem.
case-367	SAD/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIST/C RITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about the file issue at work. That must have been really stressful having to spend so much time fixing it. It's understandable to feel worried about how your manager will react. The best thing is to be upfront with them, explain what happened, and focus on how you resolved the problem. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - mistakes happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. Just be direct in your communication, and I'm sure it will work out.
case-368	SAD/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIST/E NTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about that situation at work. It can be really stressful when something like that happens, even if you're able to fix it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - we all make mistakes sometimes. The important thing is that you were able to resolve the issue. I'm sure your manager will appreciate that you took responsibility and got it sorted out. Just focus on doing your best going forward. If you're still feeling anxious about it, you could consider having an open conversation with your manager to get their perspective. But I'm confident you'll be able to move past this. Let me know if there's anything else I can do to ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-369	SAD/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/CURIOUS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. From an analytical perspective, the key now is to focus on next steps. I would suggest being proactive and having a calm, factual conversation with your manager. Explain what happened, the steps you took to fix it, and any measures you'll put in place to prevent it from happening again. Emphasize your commitment to your work and that you've learned from this experience. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility in addressing the issue. The most important thing is resolving the problem, which you've already done. Try not to dwell on feelings ...
case-370	SAD/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The best approach is to be upfront with your manager. Explain what happened, how you were able to recover the file, and the steps you've taken to prevent it from happening again. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and are committed to being more careful going forward. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility. Moving forward, I'd suggest reviewing your file backup and recovery processes to identify any areas for improvement. Putting stronger safeguards ...
case-371	SAD/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 4. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. The best approach here is to be proactive and transparent with your manager. Explain what happened, the steps you took to fix it, and any measures you've put in place to prevent it from happening again. Focus on the practical solutions rather than dwelling on the mistake itself. Your manager will likely appreciate your ownership of the issue and your efforts to resolve it efficiently. Going forward, I'd suggest reviewing your file management processes to identify any areas that could be improved to reduce the risk of accidental deletions. Implementing regular backups or using ...
case-372	SAD/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a significant amount of time fixing it can be quite upsetting. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The most constructive approach now is to focus on next steps. I would suggest being proactive and having an open conversation with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and objectively, emphasize that you were able to resolve the issue, and ask if there are any process improvements you can make to prevent similar incidents in the future. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and willingness to learn. Going forward, you ...
case-373	SAD/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a significant amount of time fixing it can be quite upsetting. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The most constructive approach now is to focus on the steps you can take going forward. I would suggest speaking openly with your manager about what happened. Explain the issue, how you resolved it, and any measures you plan to implement to prevent similar incidents in the future. Managers generally appreciate transparency and a proactive approach to addressing problems. In the meantime, try not to dwell on feelings of embarrassment. Learn from this experience, ... case-374	SAD/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. My recommendation would be to have an open and honest conversation with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and the lessons you've learned. Focus on the actions you've taken, rather than dwelling on the mistake itself. Your manager will likely appreciate your proactive approach and commitment to resolving the problem. Moving forward, consider implementing some safeguards, like regularly backing up critical files, to help prevent similar issues in the future. But for now, try not to be too hard on yourself. Mistakes happen, and the important ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-375	SAD/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The most constructive approach now is to focus on the steps forward. I would suggest being proactive and having an open conversation with your manager about what happened. Explain the issue clearly, take responsibility, and outline the actions you've already taken to resolve it. This demonstrates your professionalism and commitment to your work. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency. Moving forward, you could also consider implementing some additional safeguards, like regularly backing up critical files, ... case-376	SAD/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. While it's understandable to feel embarrassed, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the main thing is that you were able to resolve the issue efficiently. Moving forward, I would suggest documenting the steps you took to recover the file, in case your manager has any questions. You could also propose a process improvement, like implementing a more robust backup system, to help prevent similar issues in the future. Focusing on constructive solutions rather than dwelling on the mistake itself will likely be the best ... case-377	SAD/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/CURIUS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about that situation at work. It can be really stressful when something like that happens, even if you were able to fix it. It's understandable to feel worried about how your manager might react. The important thing is that you were able to resolve the issue, even if it took some time. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. If you're still feeling anxious about it, you could consider having an open conversation with your manager to explain what happened. They may be more understanding than you expect. In the meantime, try to be kind to yourself. It was an honest mistake, and the main thing is ... case-378	SAD/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about that situation at work. It can be really stressful when something like that happens, even if you were able to fix it. I know it's not easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Mistakes happen, and the important thing is that you were able to resolve it. Your manager will likely appreciate that you took responsibility and got it sorted out. Focus on learning from this experience, and don't dwell too much on the embarrassment. You've got this. case-379	SAD/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The most constructive approach now is to focus on resolving the issue. I would suggest speaking honestly with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the problem and reassure them that it won't happen again. Emphasize the lessons you've learned and your commitment to being more careful in the future. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility. Many will understand that occasional mistakes are inevitable. The key is demonstrating that ... case-380	SAD/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about that situation at work. It can be really stressful when something like that happens, even if you were able to fix it. I know it's not easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Mistakes happen, and the important thing is that you were able to resolve it. Your manager will likely appreciate that you took responsibility and got it sorted out. Just focus on doing your best going forward. I'm here if you need any other support.

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-381	SAD/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and upsetting situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can really take a toll. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue, and emphasize that you learned from the experience. Chances are, your manager will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the mistake - focus on moving forward and doing your best going ...
case-382	SAD/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a lot of time and effort to resolve. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The most important thing now is to focus on resolving the issue as best you can. When you meet with your manager, be upfront about what happened and the steps you took to fix it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility. In the meantime, try ...
case-383	SAD/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and upsetting situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can really take a toll. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I'd suggest focusing on the positive - that you were able to resolve the issue. When you speak to your manager, be upfront about what happened, explain the steps you took to fix it, and emphasize that it won't happen again. Chances are, they'll appreciate your honesty and responsibility ... case-384	SAD/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about that situation at work. It can be really stressful when something like that happens, even if you were able to fix it. The important thing is that you were able to resolve the issue, even if it took some time. I'm sure your manager will appreciate that you took responsibility and got it sorted out. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. The best thing is that you learned from the experience and now know how to prevent it in the future. Why don't we brainstorm a few ways you could approach talking to your manager about it, so you can feel more prepared? I'm happy ...
case-385	HURT/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CURIOUS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a lot of time and effort to fix. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The most important thing now is to focus on resolving the situation. I would suggest being proactive and having an open conversation with your manager. Explain what happened, what you did to resolve it, and any steps you'll take to prevent it in the future. Managers generally appreciate honesty and accountability. With a calm, professional approach, this can be an opportunity to demonstrate your problem-solving skills. In the ... case-386	HURT/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a lot of time and effort to fix. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The most important thing now is to focus on resolving the situation. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to recover the file and the time it required. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility. In the meantime, ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-387	HURT/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 5. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. While mistakes can be upsetting, the important thing is that you were able to resolve the issue, even if it took some time. Rather than dwelling on the error, I would suggest focusing on what you can do going forward. One constructive step could be to have a brief, factual conversation with your manager. Explain what happened, note the steps you took to fix it, and ask if there are any process improvements you can make to prevent similar issues in the future. Approaching it this way demonstrates your accountability and commitment to doing better. Your manager will likely appreciate your proactive approach. In the meantime, try not to be ...
case-388	HURT/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a lot of time and effort to fix. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The most important thing now is to focus on resolving the situation. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to recover the file and the time it required. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility. In the meantime, ... case-389	HURT/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/FEARFUL_DISTRICTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is a common mistake, and it's understandable to feel embarrassed about it. The important thing is that you were able to fix it, even if it took some time. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I would suggest focusing on what you learned from this experience. Think about what steps you can take to prevent something like this from happening again in the future. Maybe there are backup procedures you can put in place or ways to double-check your work. The best thing you can do now is to be upfront with your manager, explain what happened, and let them know the steps ...
case-390	HURT/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, even to the best of us. The fact that you were able to fix it in a timely manner shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I would suggest focusing on the positive - that you were able to resolve the issue efficiently. When you speak with your manager, be upfront about what happened, but also highlight the steps you took to rectify it. Emphasize that you learned from the ...
case-391	HURT/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, even to the best of us. The fact that you were able to fix it in a timely manner shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue quickly. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility. Focus on ...
case-392	HURT/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a lot of time and effort to fix. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The most important thing now is to focus on the solution. You were able to recover the file, which is great. I would suggest being proactive and having a brief, honest conversation with your manager. Explain what happened, what you did to resolve it, and any steps you'll take to prevent it in the future. Chances are your manager will appreciate your transparency and responsibility. In the meantime, ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-393	HURT/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CURIOUS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can definitely make you feel embarrassed. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the mistake itself - instead, emphasize what you learned and how you'll be more careful going forward. ... case-394	HURT/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is a common mistake, and it's understandable to feel embarrassed about it. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. The important thing is that you were able to fix it, even if it took some time. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront and honest about what happened. Explain that you made a mistake, but that you were able to resolve the issue. Focus on the steps you took to fix it, rather than dwelling on the mistake itself. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility in handling the situation. The most important thing is that the file is recovered ... case-395	HURT/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be frustrating. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, the best thing you can do now is be upfront with your manager. Explain what happened, how you fixed it, and what you've learned. Managers generally appreciate honesty and accountability. Focus on the steps you took to resolve the issue, rather than dwelling on the mistake itself. With a clear explanation, your manager is likely to see this as a learning opportunity rather than a major problem. The key is to address it proactively and demonstrate your commitment to doing better going forward. case-396	HURT/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it is a difficult situation. I can see why you feel embarrassed and worried about how your manager will react. The best thing to do is to be upfront with your manager, explain what happened, and let them know the steps you took to resolve it. Focus on the solution rather than dwelling on the mistake. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the issue. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. Just be direct in communicating with your ... case-397	HURT/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be really stressful and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is a common mistake, and it's understandable to feel embarrassed about it. The important thing is that you were able to fix it, even though it took time. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation clearly and focus on how you resolved the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, and the main thing is that you were able to recover the file. Just be direct in your communication, and I'm sure your manager will understand. case-398	HURT/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really stressful. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The best thing to do now is to be upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the mistake itself ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-399	HURT/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and upsetting situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, and I can see why you're feeling embarrassed about it. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix it, which shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. When speaking to your manager, I would suggest being upfront and taking responsibility. Explain what happened, how you resolved it, and any steps you'll take to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and accountability. Focus on the positive - that you were able to recover the file and get the ... case-400	HURT/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is a common mistake, and it's understandable to feel embarrassed about it. The good news is that you were able to fix it, which shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I suggest focusing on what you learned from this experience. Think about how you can prevent something like this from happening again in the future. When you talk to your manager, be honest about what happened, explain the steps you took to resolve it, and share any ideas you have for improving your file management processes. Approach it as a learning opportunity rather than something to be ...
case-401	HURT/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/CURIIOUS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can feel really stressful. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When you talk to your manager, focus on explaining what happened and the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have processes in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling the situation. Try to stay calm and grounded - you've got ...
case-402	HURT/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is a common mistake, and it's understandable to feel embarrassed about it. The important thing is that you were able to fix it, even though it took time. I would suggest focusing on the positive - that you resolved the issue. When speaking to your manager, try to stay calm and explain what happened in a straightforward way. Emphasize that you were able to recover the file. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. This one incident doesn't define you or your work. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, and the main thing is ...
case-403	HURT/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this").	I understand this must be frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is a common mistake, even for experienced professionals. The important thing now is to focus on resolving the issue. Here are a few suggestions that may help: First, document what happened - make a brief note explaining the situation and the steps you took to recover the file. This shows you took responsibility and addressed it proactively. When speaking to your manager, be honest but focus on the solution, not just the mistake. Explain what happened, what you did to fix it, and any steps you'll take to prevent similar issues in the future. Managers generally appreciate this kind of accountability. Try not to be too hard ... case-404	HURT/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really stressful and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really frustrating. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When you talk to your manager, focus on explaining what happened and the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have processes in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling the situation. Try to stay calm and remember ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-405	HURT/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really stressful and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can feel really embarrassing. It's understandable to be worried about how your manager will react. The best thing is to be upfront with them about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Try not to be too hard on yourself - mistakes happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. Just focus on communicating clearly with your manager.
case-406	HURT/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a very stressful situation. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Accidents happen, even with important work tasks. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, which shows your dedication. I would suggest focusing on the positive - that you resolved the problem efficiently. When speaking to your manager, be honest but also emphasize the steps you took to address it. They will likely appreciate your responsibility in handling it. Try to stay calm and grounded. This one incident does not define your work abilities. You've got this.
case-407	HURT/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a very stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When speaking to your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility. Try not ...
case-408	HURT/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about the file issue at work. That must have been really stressful having to spend so much time fixing it. It's understandable to feel worried about how your manager might react. The important thing is that you were able to resolve the problem. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. The best thing you can do now is focus on learning from the experience so you can prevent similar issues in the future. I'm here if you need any support or just want to talk through it. Let me know how else I can help.
case-409	HURT/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CURIOUS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes a lot of time and effort to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the most careful people. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront and taking responsibility. Explain what happened, the steps you took to resolve it, and any measures you'll take to prevent it from happening again in the future. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and proactive approach. Try not to dwell on feelings of embarrassment - focus on the solution ...
case-410	HURT/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes a lot of time and effort to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the most careful people. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. When speaking to your manager, I would suggest being upfront and taking responsibility. Explain what happened, the steps you took to resolve it, and any measures you'll take to prevent it from happening again in the future. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and proactive approach. Try not to dwell on feelings of embarrassment - focus on the solution ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-411	HURT/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. The best approach here is to be upfront with your manager. Explain what happened, how you were able to recover the file, and the steps you've taken to prevent this from happening again. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have implemented new safeguards. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility. Try not to dwell on feelings of embarrassment. Mistakes happen, even to the most careful people. The key is addressing the issue directly and demonstrating that you've taken it seriously. With a calm, professional approach, you can move forward productively. ... case-412	HURT/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a very stressful situation for you. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can be really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The most important thing now is to focus on resolving the issue. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix it and reassure them that it won't happen again. Managers generally appreciate honesty and responsibility. With a calm, professional approach, this can likely be resolved without major consequences. In the meantime, try not to dwell on it too much. ... case-413	HURT/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a very stressful situation for you. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can be really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the most careful people. The best thing to do now is to be upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell too much on the mistake ... case-414	HURT/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes a lot of time and effort to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the most careful people. The best thing is that you were able to fix the issue. When speaking to your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve it and the time it required. Focus on the positive - that you were able to recover the file and get it working again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Try not to ... case-415	HURT/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes a significant amount of time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the most careful people. The best approach is to be upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and the time it required. Focus on the solution rather than dwelling on the mistake. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Many managers understand that occasional errors are part of the learning process. The key is to remain calm and professional. Avoid getting defensive ... case-416	HURT/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, and I can see why you're worried about how your manager will respond. The good news is that you were able to recover the file, which is the most important thing. While it's understandable to feel embarrassed, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The key now is to focus on learning from this experience so you can prevent similar issues in the future. I'm happy to discuss strategies for file management and backup if that would be helpful. In the meantime, I encourage you to be upfront with your manager about ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-417	HURT/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CURI OUS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really stressful. I know you're worried about what your manager will think, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I'm sure your manager will appreciate that you took the time to fix the issue thoroughly. If you're comfortable, you could consider briefly explaining the situation to them and letting them know it won't happen again. But try not to dwell on it too much. Just focus on doing your best ...
case-418	HURT/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/EXCI TED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it is a difficult situation. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The most important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix it, and reassure them that it won't happen again. Chances are, they'll appreciate your honesty and responsibility in resolving the issue. Try not to dwell on the mistake - focus on moving forward. I'm here if you need any other ... case-419	HURT/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CAU TIOUS_SKEPTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this").	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The most constructive approach now is to focus on addressing the issue. I would suggest speaking honestly with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the problem and reassure them that it won't happen again. Emphasize your commitment to your work and your willingness to learn from this experience. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency. In the future, you may want to consider implementing some safeguards, like regularly backing up ...
case-420	HURT/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CON CERNED_OVERWHELMED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really stressful for you. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can be really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve it. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty. Try not to dwell on the mistake - learn from it and move forward. You've got this.
case-421	HURT/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/FEAR FUL_DISTRUSTFUL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really stressful for you. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty. Try not to dwell on it too much - learn from the experience and move forward. I'm here if you need any other ...
case-422	HURT/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/NEU TRAL_UNDECIDED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really stressful. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When you talk to your manager, focus on explaining what happened and the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling the situation. Try not to dwell on ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-423	HURT/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a lot of time and effort to fix. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve it. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the mistake itself - instead, emphasize what you learned and how you'll ...
case-424	HURT/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a lot of time and effort to fix. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The most important thing now is to focus on resolving the situation. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to recover the file and the time it required. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. ...
case-425	HURT/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIST/CURIOUS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about that situation at work. It can be really stressful when something like that happens, even if it gets resolved. Try not to be too hard on yourself - we all make mistakes sometimes. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. I'm sure your manager will appreciate that you took responsibility and got it sorted out. Just focus on doing your best going forward. If you're still feeling anxious about it, you could consider talking to your manager directly to get it off your chest. But try not to dwell on it too much. You've got this.
case-426	HURT/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIST/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about that situation at work. It can be really stressful when something like that happens, even if you were able to fix it. I know it's not easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Mistakes happen, and the important thing is that you were able to resolve it. Your manager will likely appreciate that you took responsibility and got it sorted out. Just focus on doing your best going forward. If you're still feeling anxious about it, you could consider talking to your manager directly to get it off your chest. But try not to dwell on it too much. You've got this.
case-427	HURT/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIST/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this").	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The most important thing now is to focus on resolving the issue. Have you been able to recover the file? If not, I'd suggest speaking with your manager directly and explaining what happened. Honesty is usually the best policy in these situations. Emphasize that you've learned from this experience and outline the steps you've taken to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your proactive approach. Many people understand that technology can be finicky ...
case-428	HURT/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIST/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about the file issue at work. That must have been really stressful having to spend so much time fixing it. I know it's not easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to resolve it. I'm sure your manager will appreciate that you took the time to properly address the problem. If you're worried about how they might react, you could try having an open conversation with them about it. Explain what happened and how you fixed it. They may be more understanding than you expect. In the meantime, try not to dwell ...
case-429	HURT/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIST/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about that situation at work. It can be really stressful when something like that happens, even if you were able to fix it. I know it's not easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Mistakes happen, and the important thing is that you were able to resolve it. Your manager will likely appreciate that you took responsibility and got it sorted out. Just focus on doing your best going forward. If you're still feeling anxious about it, you could consider talking to your manager directly to get it off your chest. But try not to dwell on it too much. You've got this.

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-430	HURT/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIST/ NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about the file issue at work. That must have been really stressful having to spend so much time fixing it. It's understandable to feel worried about how your manager will react. The best thing is to be upfront with them about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve it. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty. Try not to be too hard on yourself - mistakes happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. Just do your best to learn from this experience.
case-431	HURT/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIST/ CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about the file issue at work. That must have been really stressful having to spend so much time fixing it. It's understandable to feel worried about how your manager will react. The best thing is to be upfront with them about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve it. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Try not to be too hard on yourself - mistakes happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. Just be direct in your communication, and I'm sure it will work out.
case-432	HURT/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIST/ ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about that situation at work. It can be really stressful when something like that happens, even if you were able to fix it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - we all make mistakes sometimes. The important thing is that you were able to resolve the issue. I'm sure your manager will appreciate that you took responsibility and got it sorted out. Just focus on doing your best going forward. If you're still feeling anxious about it, you could consider having an open conversation with your manager to get their perspective. But try not to dwell on it too much. You've got this!
case-433	HURT/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/CURIOUS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step.	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes time to resolve. As an analytical perspective, the best approach here is to focus on the practical next steps. I would suggest being proactive and having an open conversation with your manager about what happened. Explain the issue clearly, take responsibility, and outline the steps you took to resolve it. This demonstrates your professionalism and commitment to your work. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency. Many people make honest mistakes, and how you handle it is often more important than the mistake itself. I would avoid dwelling on feelings of embarrassment, and instead concentrate on having a ... case-434	HURT/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step.	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The best approach is to be upfront with your manager. Explain what happened, how you were able to recover the file, and the steps you've taken to prevent it from happening again. Focus on the solution rather than dwelling on the mistake. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the issue. Moving forward, consider implementing some safeguards, like regularly backing up critical files or using version control software. That way, if something similar ...
case-435	HURT/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 4. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this").	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be stressful, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. A few practical suggestions that may help: 1. Document the steps you took to recover the file. This creates a record of your diligence in addressing the issue. 2. Proactively reach out to your manager to explain what happened. Focus on the actions you took to resolve it efficiently, rather than dwelling on the mistake itself. 3. Consider proposing a process improvement, such as implementing better backup procedures, to help prevent similar issues in the future. This demonstrates your commitment to learning from the experience. The key is to remain calm, professional, and solution-oriented. Avoid self-criticism, ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-436	HURT/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a significant amount of time fixing it can be quite upsetting. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the most careful of us. The best thing to do now is to focus on the practical next steps. I would suggest speaking openly with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and objectively, and emphasize the steps you took to resolve the issue. Managers generally appreciate honesty and accountability. Moving forward, you could also look into ways to prevent similar incidents, such as implementing better backup procedures or being more cautious when working with sensitive ...
case-437	HURT/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a significant amount of time fixing it can be very upsetting. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the most careful people. The best thing to do now is to be proactive. I would suggest speaking honestly with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue and emphasize that you learned from the experience. Focus the conversation on the solutions you implemented, rather than dwelling on the mistake itself. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility in handling the situation. Going forward, you may want to review your ...
case-438	HURT/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes time to resolve. As an analytical data-driven professional, my recommendation would be to focus on the practical next steps. First, I would suggest documenting the steps you took to recover the file. This creates a record of your diligence and problem-solving approach. When speaking to your manager, you can explain the issue calmly and objectively, emphasizing the actions you took to resolve it efficiently. Secondly, I would recommend being proactive about any process improvements that could prevent similar incidents in the future. Perhaps exploring data backup protocols or file management best practices. Presenting solutions demonstrates your commitment to ...
case-439	HURT/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the most careful of us. The best approach now is to be proactive. I would suggest speaking honestly with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and the measures you'll put in place to prevent it from recurring. Focusing on solutions rather than dwelling on the mistake itself is usually the wisest path forward. With a calm, professional demeanor, you can demonstrate your commitment to doing good work. The key is to avoid ... case-440	HURT/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing now is to focus on the steps you've taken to fix the issue. Since you've already resolved the problem, I would suggest being upfront with your manager. Explain what happened, the steps you took to recover the file, and the measures you'll put in place to prevent similar issues in the future. Emphasize your commitment to your work and your desire to learn from this experience. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency ... case-441	HURT/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/CURIOUS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about that situation at work. It can be really stressful when something like that happens, even if it gets resolved. I know it's not easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Mistakes happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. Your manager will likely appreciate that you took responsibility and got it sorted out. Why don't we brainstorm a few ways you could approach the conversation with your manager, so you can feel more prepared? I'm happy to offer a fresh perspective if that would be helpful.

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-442	HURT/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about that situation at work. It can be really stressful when something like that happens, even if it gets resolved. Try not to be too hard on yourself - we all make mistakes sometimes. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. I'm sure your manager will appreciate that you took responsibility and got it sorted out. Just focus on doing your best going forward. If you're still feeling anxious about it, you could consider having a brief, honest conversation with your manager to get it off your chest. But try not to dwell on it too much. You've got this.
case-443	HURT/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be frustrating. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes time to resolve. The good news is you were able to fix it, even if it took some effort. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I suggest focusing on what you can control. When you have a chance, have an honest conversation with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue and any measures you'll take to prevent it from happening again. Emphasize your commitment to your work and your team. With a clear, factual explanation, your manager is more likely to appreciate your responsibility in handling the situation. In the meantime, try ...
case-444	HURT/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it is a difficult situation. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue, and reassure them that it won't happen again. Chances are, they'll appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. This one mistake doesn't define you or your work. Focus on moving forward and learning from the experience.
case-445	HURT/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be really stressful and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a lot of time and effort to fix. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When speaking to your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened, take responsibility, and focus on the steps you took to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and it won't happen again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and proactiveness. Try not to dwell on it too much - ...
case-446	HURT/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and upsetting situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a lot of time and effort to resolve. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix it. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I'd suggest focusing on the positive - that you were able to recover the file and get the issue resolved. When speaking with your manager, be upfront about what happened, but also highlight the steps you took to fix it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience ...
case-447	HURT/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and upsetting situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a lot of time and effort to resolve. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The most important thing now is to focus on resolving the issue as best you can. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened - explain the situation calmly and emphasize the steps you took to fix it. Chances are, they will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Moving forward, you could look into ways to prevent this from happening again, ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-448	HURT/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about that situation at work. It can be really stressful when something like that happens, even if you were able to fix it. I know it's not easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Mistakes happen, and the important thing is that you were able to resolve it. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I'd suggest focusing on what you learned from the experience. Is there anything you can do differently going forward to prevent something similar from happening again? Even small process improvements can make a big difference. And remember, your manager is likely more concerned with how you handle challenges than with the occasional mistake. ...
case-449	EMBARRASSED/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CURIOS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be really frustrating and embarrassing for you. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a lot of time to fix. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I would suggest focusing on what you learned from this experience. Is there anything you can do to prevent a similar issue in the future, like regularly backing up important files? I'm happy to brainstorm some small, practical steps you could take. The main thing is not to dwell on the mistake, ...
case-450	EMBARRASSED/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be really frustrating and embarrassing for you. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to fix it. That shows a lot of dedication and problem-solving skills on your part. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I would suggest focusing on the positive - you took responsibility, worked hard to resolve the issue, and got the file restored. That's the kind of initiative and resilience that managers appreciate. When you have a chance, I'd recommend briefly explaining the situation to your manager. Acknowledge the mistake, but also highlight how you were able to fix it efficiently. This will show your manager that you take ...
case-451	EMBARRASSED/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 5. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, even if it took some time. Moving forward, I would suggest speaking honestly with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and reassure them that it won't happen again. Focus on the solution rather than dwelling on the mistake. Many managers will appreciate your proactivity and transparency. In the meantime, make a note to back up critical files more regularly. That can help prevent similar issues in the future. Let me know if you ...
case-452	EMBARRASSED/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be really frustrating and embarrassing for you. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a lot of time to fix. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I would suggest focusing on what you learned from this experience. Think about how you can be more careful with important files going forward. Maybe there are some process improvements you could suggest to your team to prevent this from happening again. For now, I would recommend taking a deep breath and ...
case-453	EMBARRASSED/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. It's understandable to feel worried about how your manager will react. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, even if it took some time. I would suggest focusing on the positive - that you were able to resolve the problem. When speaking with your manager, be honest about what happened, but also highlight the steps you took to address it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and will be more careful going forward. With a calm, professional approach, your manager is likely to appreciate your ownership of the situation. For now, try not to dwell on the embarrassment. You handled it well, and that's ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-454	EMBARRASSED/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/ NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. It's understandable to feel worried about how your manager will react. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, even if it took some time. Rather than dwelling on the mistake, I suggest focusing on what you learned from the experience and how you can prevent something similar from happening in the future. Is there a process you could put in place to regularly back up important files? Or a way to double-check your work before making changes? I'm happy to brainstorm some practical next steps if that would be helpful. The main thing is not to be too hard on yourself - we all make ...
case-455	EMBARRASSED/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/ CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. It's understandable to feel worried about how your manager will react. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, even if it took some time. Rather than dwelling on the mistake, I suggest focusing on what you learned from the experience and how you can prevent something similar from happening in the future. Is there a process you could improve or a backup system you could set up? I'm happy to brainstorm some constructive next steps, if that would be helpful. The main thing is not to be too hard on yourself - we all make mistakes sometimes. The key is learning from them.
case-456	EMBARRASSED/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/ ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must feel really embarrassing and stressful. Accidentally deleting an important file is a common mistake, and it's great that you were able to recover it. Your manager will likely appreciate that you took responsibility and fixed the issue promptly. The best thing is to be upfront about what happened, explain the steps you took to resolve it, and reassure them it won't happen again. I'm confident you can move forward from this - just focus on the solution, not the mistake. Let me know if you need any other suggestions for how to handle this professionally.
case-457	EMBARRASSED/CLEAR_DIRECT_COAC H/CURIOS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be really embarrassing for you. Accidentally deleting an important file is a stressful situation, and I can see why you're worried about how your manager will react. The good news is that you were able to fix it, even if it took some time. The best thing to do now is to be upfront with your manager. Explain what happened, let them know you've resolved the issue, and assure them it won't happen again. Owning up to mistakes can be difficult, but it's often the best approach. I'm confident you can handle this professionally. Just focus on the solution, not the mistake.
case-458	EMBARRASSED/CLEAR_DIRECT_COAC H/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be really embarrassing for you. Accidentally deleting an important file is a stressful situation, and I can see why you're worried about how your manager will react. The good news is that you were able to fix it, which shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. Rather than dwelling on the mistake, I'd suggest focusing on what you learned from the experience and how you can prevent something similar from happening in the future. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and your ability to handle the situation professionally. Try not to be too hard on yourself - we all make mistakes sometimes. The important thing is that you were able to resolve it.
case-459	EMBARRASSED/CLEAR_DIRECT_COAC H/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this is an embarrassing situation, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Mistakes happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, which shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I suggest focusing on what you can control. Document the steps you took to resolve the problem, and be prepared to explain the situation calmly and professionally if your manager asks about it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Moving forward, consider setting up automatic backups or version control for important files to minimize the ...
case-460	EMBARRASSED/CLEAR_DIRECT_COAC H/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this is an embarrassing situation. It's understandable to feel worried about how your manager will react. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, even though it took time. I suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve it, and emphasize that you learned from the experience. Focus on the positive - that you were able to recover the file and prevent further problems. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment. Learn from this, and move forward.

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-461	EMBARRASSED/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this is an embarrassing situation. It's understandable to feel worried about how your manager will react. The best thing is to be upfront and take responsibility. Explain what happened calmly and focus on how you resolved the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and that you were able to fix the problem. Going forward, you can learn from this experience and be more careful with important files. The main thing is that you resolved it, and that's what matters most.
case-462	EMBARRASSED/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this is an embarrassing situation. It's understandable to feel that way, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve it, and emphasize that you learned from the experience. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Going forward, you could look into ways to prevent similar mistakes, like setting up better backup systems. But for now, don't dwell on it too much. You addressed the problem, and that's what matters most.
case-463	EMBARRASSED/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this is an embarrassing situation. It's understandable to feel worried about how your manager will react. The best thing is to be upfront and take responsibility. Explain what happened calmly and focus on how you resolved the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and that you were able to fix the problem. Going forward, you can learn from this experience and be more careful with important files. The main thing is that you addressed it professionally. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - just focus on moving forward.
case-464	EMBARRASSED/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really frustrating and embarrassing for you. Accidentally deleting an important file is never a good feeling, especially when it takes a lot of time to fix. The good news is that you were able to recover the file, which is the most important thing. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I suggest focusing on what you learned from this experience. Think about how you can be more careful with important files going forward, or if there are any process improvements you could suggest to prevent this from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your proactivity in addressing the issue. The main thing is that you resolved the problem. Try not to ...
case-465	EMBARRASSED/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/CURIOUS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must feel really embarrassing and stressful. It's understandable to feel that way after making a mistake at work, even if it gets resolved. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. I suggest focusing on that - you handled it responsibly and got the work done. Your manager will likely appreciate that you took ownership and resolved the problem. Try not to be too hard on yourself. Mistakes happen, and the best thing is that you learned from this experience. Why don't we talk through some ways you can approach your manager about it, if you'd like? I'm here to listen and provide a steady, grounded perspective.
case-466	EMBARRASSED/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must feel really embarrassing and stressful. It's understandable to feel that way after making a mistake at work, even if it gets resolved. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. I would suggest focusing on the positive that you were able to resolve it, rather than dwelling on the embarrassment. When speaking to your manager, be honest but don't dwell on the mistake. Emphasize what you learned and how you fixed the problem. With a calm, professional approach, this can be an opportunity to demonstrate your problem-solving skills. The embarrassment will pass, but staying composed will serve you well.

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-467	EMBARRASSED/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, the best thing you can do now is focus on addressing the issue efficiently and professionally. I would suggest speaking directly with your manager, explaining what happened, and outlining the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have implemented safeguards to prevent it from happening again. Managers generally appreciate honesty and proactive problem-solving. With a calm, solutions-oriented approach, you can move past this incident. I'm happy to provide any other practical suggestions, but try not to dwell on the embarrassment - the priority now is addressing it ...
case-468	EMBARRASSED/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must feel really embarrassing and stressful. It's understandable to feel that way after making a mistake at work, even if it gets resolved. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. I would suggest focusing on that - you handled it responsibly and got the work done. Your manager will likely appreciate that you took ownership and resolved the problem. Try not to be too hard on yourself. Mistakes happen, and the best thing is that you learned from this experience. Why don't we talk through some ways you can approach this with your manager, if you'd like? I'm here to listen and provide a steady, grounded perspective.
case-469	EMBARRASSED/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be really embarrassing and stressful for you. It's understandable to feel that way after making a mistake at work, even if it got resolved. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. Try not to be too hard on yourself - we all make mistakes sometimes. The best thing you can do now is focus on learning from this experience so it doesn't happen again. I'm here if you need any support or just want to talk it through.
case-470	EMBARRASSED/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must feel really embarrassing and stressful. It's understandable to feel that way after making a mistake at work, even if it gets resolved. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. Try not to be too hard on yourself - we all make mistakes sometimes. The best thing is that you were able to address it. I would suggest focusing on that positive outcome rather than worrying about what your manager might think. If they bring it up, you can simply explain what happened in a straightforward way. For now, try to take a few deep breaths and remind yourself that this will pass. You've got this.
case-471	EMBARRASSED/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. It's understandable to feel worried about how your manager might react. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, even if it took some time. Rather than dwelling on the mistake, I suggest focusing on what you learned and how you can prevent something similar from happening in the future. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and your efforts to resolve the problem. Try not to be too hard on yourself - we all make mistakes sometimes. The best thing is to learn from this experience and move forward.
case-472	EMBARRASSED/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must feel really embarrassing and stressful. Accidentally deleting an important file is a common mistake, and it's great that you were able to fix it. Your manager will likely appreciate your diligence in resolving the issue. The best thing is to be upfront about what happened, explain the steps you took to fix it, and reassure your manager that it won't happen again. I'm confident you can move past this - just focus on the solution rather than dwelling on the mistake. Let me know if you need any other suggestions for how to handle this professionally.
case-473	EMBARRASSED/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CURIOUS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but it happens to the best of us sometimes. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, even if it took some time. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue, and emphasize that you learned from the experience. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in resolving the problem. Try not to dwell too much on the embarrassment - focus on the positive that you were able to recover the file. The main thing is that the issue has been resolved. Try not ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-474	EMBARRASSED/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but it happens to the best of us sometimes. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, even if it took some time. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue, and emphasize that you learned from the experience. Managers generally appreciate honesty and proactivity in addressing problems. With a calm, professional approach, this should blow over. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - focus on the positive that you were able to resolve it. case-475	EMBARRASSED/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. The best approach here is to be upfront with your manager. Explain what happened clearly and concisely, focusing on the steps you took to fix the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have implemented measures to prevent similar mistakes in the future. Your manager will likely appreciate your ownership of the situation. Moving forward, I'd suggest reviewing your file backup and recovery processes to identify any areas for improvement. Implementing more robust safeguards can help mitigate the risk of data loss going forward. Let me know if you need any specific ... case-476	EMBARRASSED/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a very stressful and embarrassing situation for you. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to fix it. Your manager will likely appreciate that you took the initiative to resolve the issue, even if it took some time. The best thing is to be upfront about what happened, explain the steps you took to fix it, and reassure your manager that it won't happen again. I'm confident you can handle this professionally. Let me know if you need any other advice. case-477	EMBARRASSED/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but it happens to the best of us sometimes. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, even if it took some time. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue, and emphasize that you learned from the experience. Managers generally appreciate honesty and proactivity in addressing problems. With a calm, professional approach, this should blow over without too much trouble. The main thing is that the file is recovered and the issue is resolved. case-478	EMBARRASSED/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but it happens to the best of us sometimes. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, even if it took some time. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue, and emphasize that you learned from the experience. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in resolving the problem. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - focus on the positive that you were able to recover the file. The main thing is that the issue has been resolved. I'm sure your manager ... case-479	EMBARRASSED/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but it happens to the best of us sometimes. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, even if it took some time. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue, and emphasize that you learned from the experience. Managers generally appreciate honesty and proactivity in addressing problems. With a calm, professional approach, this should blow over without too much trouble. The key is not to dwell on the mistake, but to focus on the solution. Does this help provide a balanced perspective? Let me know ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-480	EMBARRASSED/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Most managers will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. The key is to stay professional and not get defensive. You've got this.
case-481	EMBARRASSED/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CURIOUS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but it sounds like you were able to resolve it, which is the most important thing. Your manager will likely appreciate that you took the initiative to fix the issue, even if it took some time. The best thing is to be upfront about what happened and focus on the solution, rather than dwelling on the mistake. I'm happy to listen if you need to talk through it further, but try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, and the main thing is that you were able to recover the file.
case-482	EMBARRASSED/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really frustrating and embarrassing for you. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a lot of time to fix. The good news is that you were able to recover the file. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. The best thing is that you were able to resolve it. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to fix the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - just focus on learning from this experience and moving forward.
case-483	EMBARRASSED/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this").	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. The best approach here is to be upfront with your manager. Explain what happened clearly and concisely, take responsibility, and outline the steps you took to fix it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have implemented safeguards to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and proactive approach. Moving forward, I'd suggest reviewing your file backup and recovery processes to identify any areas for improvement. Implementing more robust systems can help mitigate the risk of data loss in the future. Let me know if you need any ... case-484	EMBARRASSED/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really stressful and embarrassing for you. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a lot of time to resolve. The good news is that you were able to fix it. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened - explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to recover the file. Just be direct and take responsibility, and I'm sure your manager will understand.
case-485	EMBARRASSED/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix it, which shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue quickly. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and it won't happen again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - focus on the positive that you were able to resolve it. You've got this.

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-486	EMBARRASSED/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but it sounds like you were able to resolve it, which is the most important thing. Your manager will likely appreciate that you took responsibility and worked diligently to fix the issue. The best thing is to be upfront about what happened, explain the steps you took to resolve it, and assure your manager it won't happen again. I'm confident you can move past this. Just focus on learning from the experience and doing your best going forward.
case-487	EMBARRASSED/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but it sounds like you were able to resolve it, which is the most important thing. As for your manager, try not to worry too much. The best approach is to be upfront about what happened, explain how you fixed it, and reassure them it won't happen again. Managers generally appreciate honesty and responsibility. Focus on learning from this experience, and don't be too hard on yourself. We all make mistakes sometimes.
case-488	EMBARRASSED/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. It's understandable to feel worried about how your manager will react. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, even if it took some time. I suggest focusing on the positive - that you resolved the problem and demonstrated your commitment to your work. When speaking with your manager, be upfront about what happened, but also highlight the steps you took to address it. Emphasize your dedication and willingness to learn from this experience. With a calm, professional approach, I believe you can move forward in a constructive way. Let me know if you need any other suggestions on how to handle this.
case-489	EMBARRASSED/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIST/CURIOUS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix it, which shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. I'm sure your manager will appreciate that you took the initiative to resolve the issue. Rather than worrying, I'd suggest focusing on the positive - you handled it well in the end. If you're still feeling uneasy, you could consider briefly mentioning it to your manager, but I wouldn't dwell on it. Just let them know you resolved the problem. I'm confident you'll move past ...
case-490	EMBARRASSED/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIST/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really frustrating and embarrassing for you. Accidentally deleting an important file is never a good feeling, especially when it takes a lot of time to fix. The good news is that you were able to recover the file, which is the most important thing. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes, and the main thing is that you were able to fix it. Just be straightforward, and I'm sure it ...
case-491	EMBARRASSED/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIST/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this").	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes time to resolve. The best approach here is to be upfront with your manager. Explain what happened clearly and concisely, take responsibility, and outline the steps you took to fix it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have implemented safeguards to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and proactive approach. Moving forward, I'd suggest reviewing your file backup and recovery processes to identify any areas for improvement. Implementing regular backups and having a clear recovery plan can help mitigate the impact of accidental deletions in the future. Let me know ... case-492	EMBARRASSED/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIST/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but it sounds like you were able to recover it, which is good. I know it can be worrying to think about how your manager might react, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. I'm sure your manager will appreciate that you took responsibility and resolved the issue. Just focus on doing your best going forward. If you're still feeling uneasy, you could consider briefly explaining the situation to your manager in a calm, professional manner. But try not to dwell on it too ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-493	EMBARRASSED/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIST/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. It's understandable to feel worried about how your manager will react. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, even if it took some time. I would suggest focusing on the positive - that you were able to resolve the problem. When speaking to your manager, be honest about what happened, but also emphasize that you learned from the experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. With a calm, professional approach, I'm sure you can move past this. The main thing is that the work got done, even if there were some challenges along the way.
case-494	EMBARRASSED/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIST/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really frustrating and embarrassing for you. Accidentally deleting an important file is never a good feeling, especially when it takes a lot of time to fix. The good news is that you were able to recover the file, which is the most important thing. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes, and the main thing is that you were able to fix it. Just focus on moving forward in a ... case-495	EMBARRASSED/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIST/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but it sounds like you were able to recover it, which is good. As for your manager, the best approach is to be upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and reassure them that it won't happen again. Most managers will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in resolving the problem. The important thing is that you learned from this experience and can apply those lessons going forward. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, and the main thing is that you were able to recover the file.
case-496	EMBARRASSED/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIST/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Most managers will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. With a level-headed approach, this can be an opportunity to demonstrate your problem-solving ... case-497	EMBARRASSED/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/CURIOS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step.	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, even if it took some time. Moving forward, I would suggest a few practical steps: 1. Speak to your manager proactively. Explain what happened, how you resolved it, and any measures you'll take to prevent it in the future. Being upfront is usually better than avoiding the conversation. 2. Consider documenting the steps you took to recover the file. This shows you took it seriously and can help demonstrate your problem-solving abilities. 3. Review your file backup and recovery processes to ...
case-498	EMBARRASSED/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step.	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. As a data-driven analyst, my advice would be to focus on the practical next steps. First, I would recommend documenting what happened - the steps you took to resolve the issue and the time it took. That way, you can proactively share the details with your manager if needed. Second, I would suggest reflecting on what you can learn from this experience to prevent similar issues in the future. Is there a process or backup system you can improve? Identifying those learnings can help turn this into a constructive moment. The most important thing is to remain calm and professional. Your manager will likely appreciate your taking responsibility and working ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-499	EMBARRASSED/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYSIS/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 4. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. As a data-driven analyst, here are a few practical steps I would suggest: First, take a deep breath. Mistakes happen, even to the best of us. The important thing now is to focus on resolving the issue effectively. I would recommend documenting exactly what happened - the steps you took to fix the problem, how long it took, and what you learned. Approach your manager calmly and transparently. Explain the situation factually, emphasize what you've done to resolve it, and outline any process improvements you can implement to prevent similar issues in the future. Your manager will likely appreciate your proactive approach and willingness to learn from this experience. Avoid ... case-500	EMBARRASSED/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYSIS/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. As a data-driven analyst, my advice would be to focus on the practical next steps. First, I would recommend documenting what happened - the steps you took to resolve the issue and the time it took. This will help provide context if you need to discuss it with your manager. Second, I would suggest reaching out to your manager proactively to explain what occurred. Emphasize that you were able to recover the file and resolve the issue, and that you've documented the process. This demonstrates your accountability and commitment to your work. The key is to approach this in a calm, factual manner. Avoid dwelling on the embarrassment or speculating ... case-501	EMBARRASSED/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYSIS/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. As a data-driven analyst, my recommendation would be to focus on the practical next steps. First, I suggest documenting what happened - the steps you took to resolve the issue and the time it took. This will help provide context if you need to discuss it with your manager. When you do speak with your manager, I would advise being upfront and taking responsibility. Explain what happened, what you learned, and the measures you've put in place to prevent it from happening again. Emphasize your commitment to your work and your desire to do better going forward. Your manager may appreciate your transparency and proactive approach. Try not to dwell ...
case-502	EMBARRASSED/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYSIS/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. As a data-driven analyst, my recommendation would be to focus on the practical next steps. First, I suggest documenting what happened - the steps you took to resolve the issue and the time it took. This will help provide context if you need to discuss it with your manager. Next, I would recommend reaching out to your manager proactively. Explain what happened, emphasize that you were able to recover the file, and outline the steps you've taken to prevent it from happening again. Approach it calmly and professionally. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility in handling the situation. The most important thing is to learn from this ... case-503	EMBARRASSED/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYSIS/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. As a data-driven analyst, my recommendation would be to focus on the practical next steps. First, I suggest documenting what happened - the steps you took to resolve the issue and the time it took. This will help provide context if you need to discuss it with your manager. Next, I would recommend reaching out to your manager proactively. Explain what happened, emphasize that you were able to recover the file, and outline the steps you've taken to prevent it from happening again. Approach the conversation calmly and objectively. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility in handling the situation. The most important thing is to learn from ...
case-504	EMBARRASSED/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYSIS/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. As a data-driven analyst, my recommendation would be to focus on the practical next steps. First, I suggest documenting what happened - the steps you took to resolve the issue and the time it took. This will help provide context if you need to discuss it with your manager. Second, I would recommend proactively reaching out to your manager to explain what occurred. Emphasize that you were able to recover the file and that you've learned from the experience. Propose any process improvements that could prevent similar issues in the future. The key is to be upfront, take responsibility, and demonstrate your commitment to doing better going forward. With a ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-505	EMBARRASSED/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/CURIOUS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be really frustrating and embarrassing for you. Accidentally deleting an important file is never a good feeling, especially when it takes a lot of time to fix. The good news is that you were able to recover the file, which is the most important thing. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, and the main thing is that you were able to fix it. Just focus on learning from this experience going ...
case-506	EMBARRASSED/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be really frustrating and embarrassing for you. Accidentally deleting an important file is never a good feeling, especially when it takes a lot of time to fix. The good news is that you were able to recover the file, which is the most important thing. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, and the main thing is that you were able to fix it. Just be straightforward, and I'm sure it will ...
case-507	EMBARRASSED/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be frustrating and embarrassing for you. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes time to resolve. The best thing is to focus on the solution you found rather than dwelling on the mistake. When speaking with your manager, I'd suggest briefly explaining what happened, the steps you took to fix it, and any measures you'll take to prevent similar issues in the future. Emphasize your commitment to your work and learning from this experience. Your manager will likely appreciate your proactive approach. For now, try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, and the important part is that you were able to resolve it.
case-508	EMBARRASSED/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be really frustrating and embarrassing for you. Accidentally deleting an important file is never a good feeling, especially when it takes a lot of time to fix. The good news is that you were able to recover the file, which is the most important thing. As for your manager, try not to worry too much. Mistakes happen, and they'll likely appreciate that you took the initiative to resolve the issue. The best thing is to be upfront about what happened, explain how you fixed it, and assure them it won't happen again. I'm sure they'll understand. The main thing is that you learned from this experience, and now you can be more careful going forward. Try ...
case-509	EMBARRASSED/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/FEARFUL_DISTRICTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. It's understandable to feel worried about how your manager will react. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, even if it took some time. I would suggest focusing on the positive - that you were able to resolve the problem. When speaking to your manager, be honest about what happened, but also highlight the steps you took to address it. Emphasize your commitment to your work and your desire to learn from this experience. With a calm, professional approach, you can get through this. The key is not to dwell on the embarrassment, but to demonstrate your ability to handle challenges effectively.
case-510	EMBARRASSED/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. It's understandable to feel worried about how your manager will react. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, even if it took some time. Rather than dwelling on the mistake, I suggest focusing on what you learned from the experience and how you can prevent similar issues in the future. Is there a process you can put in place to double-check your work or back up important files? I'm happy to brainstorm some ideas if that would be helpful.
case-511	EMBARRASSED/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and embarrassing situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve it. Chances are, your manager will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. The key is not to dwell on the mistake, but to demonstrate your ability to address the issue effectively. This experience may even help you become more cautious and ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-512	EMBARRASSED/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be really frustrating and embarrassing for you. Accidentally deleting an important file is never a good feeling, especially when it takes a lot of time to fix. The good news is that you were able to recover the file, which is the most important thing. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. This is just a minor setback - don't be too hard on yourself. Learn from it, and move forward. I'm confident you'll be able to handle this professionally.
case-513	SCARED/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CURIOS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a very stressful situation for you. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is a testament to your skills and diligence. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility. For now, try not to dwell on the ... case-514	SCARED/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a very stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility. For now, try not to dwell on the embarrassment. Take a deep breath, and remember that ... case-515	SCARED/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 5. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this is a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is frustrating, but it happens to many people. The good news is you were able to recover the file, which is the most important thing. Rather than worrying about your manager's reaction, I suggest focusing on what you can control. When you meet with your manager, be upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and the measures you'll put in place to prevent it from happening again. Emphasize your commitment to your work and your desire to learn from this experience. With a calm, professional approach, you can turn this into an opportunity to demonstrate your problem-solving skills. Does this sound like ... case-516	SCARED/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CONFUSED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a very stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is a testament to your skills and diligence. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and reassure them that it won't happen again. Chances are, they'll appreciate your honesty and responsibility in resolving the problem. For now, try to take a deep breath and focus on the positive - you were able to recover the file and learn ...
case-517	SCARED/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a very stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is a testament to your skills and diligence. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility. For now, try to take a deep breath. You got ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-518	SCARED/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a very stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is a testament to your skills and diligence. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility. For now, try to take a deep breath. You got ... case-519	SCARED/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a very stressful situation for you. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can be really upsetting. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When speaking to your manager, I would suggest being upfront and taking responsibility. Explain what happened, let them know you were able to fix it, and reassure them it won't happen again. Managers generally appreciate honesty and accountability. With a calm, professional approach, I'm sure you can resolve this. Just focus on the solution, not dwelling on the mistake. You've got this. case-520	SCARED/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is a testament to your skills and diligence. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue and the time it required. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling the situation. Moving forward, try not to dwell on ... case-521	SCARED/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CURIOUS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this is a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel really upsetting. However, the important thing is that you were able to fix it, even if it took some time. Your manager will likely appreciate that you took responsibility and resolved the issue. The best thing is to be upfront about what happened, explain how you fixed it, and focus on moving forward. I'm here if you need any other support or advice as you handle this. case-522	SCARED/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this is a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel really upsetting. However, the important thing is that you were able to fix it, even if it took some time. Your manager will likely appreciate that you took responsibility and resolved the issue. The best thing is to be upfront about what happened, explain the steps you took to fix it, and reassure your manager that it won't happen again. I know it's not easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Mistakes happen, and the fact that you were able to resolve it shows your dedication. Just focus on communicating clearly with your manager. case-523	SCARED/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this is a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is frustrating, but it happens. The important thing now is to focus on resolving the issue. Here are a few suggestions that may help: - Speak to your manager honestly about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix it and the lessons you've learned. Managers generally appreciate transparency. - Avoid dwelling on the mistake or beating yourself up over it. Instead, think about how you can prevent similar issues in the future, like implementing better backup procedures. - Consider speaking to a trusted colleague about this. Getting an outside perspective can help provide clarity and reassurance. The key is to stay calm, learn from this experience, ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-524	SCARED/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this is a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel really upsetting. The good news is you were able to fix it, even though it took time. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue. Focus on the solution, not just the problem. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. The main thing is you were able to recover the file. Just be direct in communicating with your manager, and try not to dwell on feeling embarrassed. You've got this.
case-525	SCARED/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this is a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel really upsetting. However, the important thing is that you were able to fix it, even if it took some time. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue. They'll likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. The main thing is that you were able to recover the file. Focus on that positive outcome.
case-526	SCARED/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this is a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel really upsetting. The good news is you were able to fix it, even though it took time. As for your manager, the best thing is to be upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you resolved the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. Just be direct in communicating with your manager, and try not to dwell on feeling embarrassed. You've got this.
case-527	SCARED/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this is a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel really upsetting. However, the important thing is that you were able to fix it, even if it took some time. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue. Focus on the positive - that you were able to recover the file and get it working again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to be too hard on yourself. Mistakes happen, and the main thing is that you were able to fix it. Just be direct in communicating with your manager.
case-528	SCARED/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue efficiently. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the mistake - instead, emphasize the steps you took to fix it. With a clear, direct approach, I'm confident you can move past this. The ...
case-529	SCARED/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/CURIOUS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a very stressful situation. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Accidents happen, even with important files. The important thing is that you were able to fix it, which shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I suggest focusing on having an open and honest conversation with them. Explain what happened, how you resolved it, and any steps you'll take to prevent similar issues in the future. Managers generally appreciate honesty and responsibility. With a calm, professional approach, this can be an opportunity to demonstrate your capabilities. Take a few deep breaths and remember that you got through this challenge. ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-530	SCARED/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a very stressful situation. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Accidents happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. I would suggest focusing on the positive - that you were able to resolve the problem, even if it took some time. When speaking with your manager, be honest about what happened, but also emphasize the steps you took to address it. Emphasize your commitment to your work and your desire to learn from this experience. Your manager will likely appreciate your responsibility and transparency. Try to take some deep breaths and remind yourself that this is a temporary setback. You've got ...
case-531	SCARED/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is understandably upsetting. The first thing I would suggest is to take a few deep breaths. This will help you stay calm as you figure out next steps. When you're ready, I recommend being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue and the time it took. Focus on the actions you took, rather than dwelling on the mistake itself. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility in addressing the problem. Going forward, consider implementing some safeguards, like regularly backing up important files, to help prevent this from happening again. But for now, try not to be ...
case-532	SCARED/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a very stressful situation. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Accidents happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. I would suggest focusing on the positive - that you were able to resolve the problem, rather than dwelling on the mistake. When speaking with your manager, be honest about what happened, but also emphasize the steps you took to address it. They will likely appreciate your proactivity. Try to stay calm and remember that one mistake does not define you. You've got this.
case-533	SCARED/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a very stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can feel really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed and worried about how your manager will react. The most important thing right now is to take a few deep breaths and try not to be too hard on yourself. Mistakes happen, even to the best of us. The main thing is that you were able to resolve the issue. I would suggest being upfront with your manager, explain what happened, and focus on the steps you took to fix it. They may appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Try not to catastrophize about the outcome - ...
case-534	SCARED/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a very stressful situation. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Accidents happen, even with important files. The important thing is that you were able to fix it, which shows your dedication. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue quickly. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and it won't happen again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. For now, try to take some deep breaths and not dwell too much on the mistake. You got through it, and that's what matters.
case-535	SCARED/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a very stressful situation. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Accidents happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I suggest focusing on the positive - that you were able to resolve the problem efficiently. When speaking with your manager, be honest about what happened, but also emphasize the steps you took to address it. Approach the conversation calmly and professionally. Your manager will likely appreciate your responsibility in handling the situation. Try to take some deep breaths and remind yourself that this is a minor setback. ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-536	SCARED/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a very stressful situation. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Accidents happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, which shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I suggest focusing on having an open and honest conversation with them. Explain what happened, what you learned, and the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize your commitment to your work and your desire to do better going forward. Managers generally appreciate honesty and accountability. With a calm, professional approach, this could be an opportunity to demonstrate your character. Try ...
case-537	SCARED/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CURIOUS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a significant amount of time fixing it can be really upsetting. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - focus ...
case-538	SCARED/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a very stressful situation for you. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can be really upsetting. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - ... case-539	SCARED/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this").	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be frustrating, but try not to be too hard on yourself. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, even if it took some time. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and the measures you'll take to prevent it from happening again. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and are committed to being more careful with important files going forward. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and proactive approach. The key is to focus on solutions rather than dwell on the mistake. With a ... case-540	SCARED/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a very stressful situation for you. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can be really upsetting. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - ... case-541	SCARED/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a very stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can be really upsetting. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - just focus ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-542	SCARED/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is good. When speaking to your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on feeling embarrassed - your manager is likely more ...
case-543	SCARED/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation for you. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a significant amount of time fixing it can be very upsetting. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the most careful people. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue and the time it required. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have implemented measures to prevent it from happening again in the future. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling the situation. ...
case-544	SCARED/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Most managers will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling the issue. With a clear explanation, they're likely to understand it was an accident and move ...
case-545	SCARED/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CURIIOUS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The most important thing now is to focus on resolving the issue. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to recover the file and the time it required. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling the situation. ...
case-546	SCARED/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and reassure them that it won't happen again. Chances are, they'll appreciate your honesty and responsibility in resolving the problem. Focus on the positive - that you were able to recover the file and learn from this experience. With a calm, professional approach, I'm sure you can move past this. Let me know ... case-547	SCARED/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CURIOUS_SKEPTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this").	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, even if it took some time. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and emphasize that you learned from the experience. Focus on the positive - that you were able to resolve the problem efficiently. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling the situation. Moving forward, you could look into data backup solutions or file recovery tools to help prevent this from happening again. ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-548	SCARED/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a very stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really upsetting. I know you're worried about what your manager will think, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager, explain what happened, and focus on the steps you took to resolve the issue. They'll likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - just focus on moving forward. I'm here if you need any ...
case-549	SCARED/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a very stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can be really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When speaking to your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain that it was an accident and that you were able to resolve the issue. Focus on what you learned from the experience and how you'll be more careful going forward. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to ...
case-550	SCARED/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When you speak to your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened, taking responsibility, and explaining the steps you took to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and it won't happen again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and proactive approach. Try not to dwell on it too much - ...
case-551	SCARED/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really upsetting. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and will be more careful going forward. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - just focus on ...
case-552	SCARED/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue efficiently. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have taken steps to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. This is just a minor setback - don't let it shake your confidence. ... case-553	SCARED/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONAL/ST_CURIOS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel really upsetting, especially when it takes a lot of time to resolve. It's understandable to feel embarrassed and worried about how your manager will react. The best thing is to be upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and reassure them that it won't happen again. Most managers will appreciate your honesty and responsibility in resolving the problem. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. Focus on learning from this experience so you can prevent similar issues in ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-554	SCARED/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALI ST/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about that situation at work. It can be really stressful when something like that happens, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Accidents happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate that you took responsibility and resolved the problem. I know it's not easy, but try not to dwell on it too much. Just focus on doing your best going forward. If you're still feeling anxious, you could consider talking to your manager about it - they may be more understanding than you expect. In the meantime, try to take a deep breath and be kind to yourself.
case-555	SCARED/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALI ST/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this").	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be frustrating, but try not to be too hard on yourself. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, even if it took some time. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and emphasize that you learned from the experience. Focus on the actions you took to resolve the problem, rather than dwelling on the mistake itself. Your manager will likely appreciate your proactive approach. Moving forward, you could look into data backup solutions or file recovery tools to help prevent this from happening again. But for ...
case-556	SCARED/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALI ST/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When you speak to your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened, but also emphasize that you were able to resolve the issue. Focus on what you learned and how you'll be more careful going forward. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on it too ... case-557	SCARED/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALI ST/FEARFUL_DISTRICTFUL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When you speak to your manager, focus on explaining what happened calmly and what you did to resolve the issue. They'll likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the mistake - just learn from it and move forward. I'm here if you need any other support.
case-558	SCARED/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALI ST/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When you speak to your manager, focus on explaining what happened and the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling the situation. Try to stay calm - I'm sure ... case-559	SCARED/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALI ST/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes a lot of time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix it. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you resolved the issue efficiently. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on feeling embarrassed - your manager is more concerned with the end result than the mistake itself. Stay positive, and remember that this is ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-560	SCARED/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONAL/ST/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I'm sorry to hear you're feeling embarrassed about that situation at work. It can be really stressful when something like that happens, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Accidents happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate that you took responsibility and resolved the problem efficiently. Going forward, you could consider setting up some extra backups or safeguards to help prevent something like this from happening again. But for now, try not to dwell on it too much. You got through this challenge, and that's what matters most. case-561	SCARED/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/CURI OUS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. As a data-driven analyst, I can provide a practical perspective. The first step is to take a deep breath and focus on resolving the issue. Accidents happen, and the important thing is that you were able to recover the file. Rather than worrying about your manager's reaction, I suggest preparing a concise summary of what happened, the steps you took to fix it, and any process improvements you can suggest to prevent similar issues in the future. Presenting this information in a calm, factual manner will demonstrate your professionalism and problem-solving skills. Your manager will likely appreciate your proactive approach. Moving forward, I recommend reviewing your backup and recovery procedures to identify ... case-562	SCARED/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/EXCI TED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. As a data-driven analyst, I can provide a practical perspective. The most important thing now is to focus on resolving the issue and preventing it from happening again. First, I would recommend documenting exactly what happened - the steps that led to the file deletion, how you were able to recover it, and the time it took. This factual information will be helpful if you need to discuss it with your manager. Next, I suggest proactively reaching out to your manager to explain the situation. Emphasize that you were able to recover the file and that you've identified ways to avoid similar incidents in the future. Propose a plan for implementing those ... case-563	SCARED/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/CAUT IOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 4. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is understandably upsetting. Here are a few suggestions on how to handle this: First, I would recommend being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to recover the file and the time it took. This shows you took responsibility and worked diligently to resolve the issue. Second, focus on the solution rather than dwelling on the mistake. Emphasize the actions you took to fix the problem and prevent it from happening again in the future. Propose any process improvements that could help avoid similar situations. Third, try not to be too hard on yourself. Mistakes happen, even to the best of us. ... case-564	SCARED/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/CON CERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, but try not to be too hard on yourself. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, even if it took some time. When speaking with your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and the measures you'll put in place to prevent it from happening again. Focus on the resolution rather than dwelling on the mistake. Your manager will likely appreciate your proactive approach. Moving forward, consider implementing some safeguards, like regularly backing up critical files or using version control software. That way, if something similar occurs in ... case-565	SCARED/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/FEAR FUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. As a data-driven analyst, I would suggest focusing on the practical next steps. First, I would recommend documenting what happened - the steps you took to resolve the issue and the time it took. This will help provide context if you need to discuss it with your manager. Moving forward, I would also recommend reviewing your file management processes to identify any areas for improvement. Are there ways you can implement better backup or version control systems to prevent this from happening again? Taking a proactive, solutions-oriented approach will likely be appreciated. The most important thing is that you were able to resolve the issue. I would advise against dwelling on feelings ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-566	SCARED/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. As a data-driven analyst, I would suggest focusing on the practical next steps. First, I would recommend documenting what happened - the steps you took to resolve the issue and the time it took. This will help provide context if you need to discuss it with your manager. Second, I would advise preparing a brief, factual summary you can share with your manager. Stick to the key details without dwelling on the mistake. Emphasize the actions you took to fix the problem efficiently. The most important thing is demonstrating your ability to handle the situation professionally. Your manager will likely appreciate your proactive approach more than dwelling on the initial error. Stay ... case-567	SCARED/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is understandably upsetting. However, the best thing to do now is to focus on resolving the issue. First, I would recommend documenting what happened - the steps you took to fix the problem and the time it took. This will help provide context if you need to discuss it with your manager. When speaking to your manager, I suggest taking a calm, factual approach. Explain what happened, what you did to resolve it, and any steps you'll take to prevent similar issues in the future. Emphasize that you were able to recover the file and minimize the impact. The key is to demonstrate that you took responsibility, ... case-568	SCARED/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. As a data-driven analyst, I can provide a practical perspective. The first step is to take a deep breath and focus on resolving the issue. Accidents happen, and the important thing is that you were able to recover the file. Rather than worrying about your manager's reaction, I suggest preparing a concise summary of what happened, the steps you took to fix it, and any process improvements you can suggest to prevent similar issues in the future. Presenting this information in a calm, factual manner will demonstrate your professionalism and problem-solving skills. Your manager is likely more interested in how you handled the situation than the initial mistake. Approach this as an ...
case-569	SCARED/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/COURIOUS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel really upsetting, especially when it takes a lot of time to resolve. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The best thing is that you were able to fix the issue. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve it, and emphasize that you learned from the experience. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. With a calm, professional approach, this can be an opportunity to demonstrate your problem-solving skills. The important ... case-570	SCARED/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When you talk to your manager, focus on explaining what happened and the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have processes in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling the situation. Try to stay calm - I'm sure ...
case-571	SCARED/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/COURTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, even if it took some time. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and emphasize that you learned from the experience. Managers generally appreciate honesty and proactivity in addressing problems. With a clear explanation, they may be more understanding than you expect. Moving forward, you could look into file backup or version control systems to help prevent this from happening again. But for now, focus on the positive - ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-572	SCARED/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a very stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can be really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The most important thing now is to focus on resolving the issue. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened - explain the situation calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and it won't happen again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - just ...
case-573	SCARED/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/FEARFUL_DISTUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a very stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can be really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The best thing to do now is to be upfront with your manager. Explain what happened calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize the steps you took to fix it efficiently. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the mistake itself - just focus on the solution. This is a learning experience, and I'm sure ...
case-574	SCARED/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend a lot of time fixing it can be really upsetting. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. When you speak to your manager, focus on explaining what happened and the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling the situation. Try to stay calm - you've got ...
case-575	SCARED/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can feel upsetting, especially when it takes a lot of time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix it. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I suggest focusing on what you learned from this experience. Think about how you can be more careful with important files going forward. You could also consider proactively speaking to your manager, explaining what happened and the steps you've taken to prevent it in the future. Approaching it this way shows responsibility and a commitment to ...
case-576	SCARED/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility. This is a temporary setback, but you got through it. Try to stay positive - you demonstrated ... case-577	ANGRY/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CURIOUS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a lot of time to resolve. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to fix it. I would suggest taking a deep breath and focusing on the positive - you solved the problem, and that's what matters most. When you speak to your manager, be honest about what happened, but also highlight the steps you took to resolve it efficiently. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and it won't happen again. Your manager will likely appreciate your proactive approach. ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-578	ANGRY/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a lot of time to fix. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The best thing to do now is to be upfront with your manager. Explain what happened calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have processes in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility. For now, take a deep breath. You got through the technical challenge, and that's ...
case-579	ANGRY/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 5. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this is a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but the important thing is that you were able to recover it. While it's understandable to feel embarrassed, try not to be too hard on yourself. The best thing now is to focus on learning from this experience. When you meet with your manager, I suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue and the measures you'll put in place to prevent it from happening again. Emphasize your commitment to your work and your willingness to learn. With a calm, professional approach, your manager is more likely to appreciate your ownership of the situation. Moving forward, consider implementing ...
case-580	ANGRY/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a lot of time to fix. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The best thing to do now is to focus on the solution. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue and emphasize that you learned from the experience. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility. Moving forward, you could look into ways to better safeguard important files to prevent this from happening again. For now, ...
case-581	ANGRY/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this is a frustrating situation. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Mistakes happen, even with important work tasks. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, which shows your dedication and problem-solving skills. Rather than worrying about your manager's reaction, I suggest focusing on what you learned from this experience. Think about how you can be more careful with important files going forward. Maybe there are some process improvements you could suggest to your team to prevent similar issues. For now, I'd recommend taking a deep breath and giving yourself credit for resolving the problem. When you speak to your manager, be honest about what happened, ...
case-582	ANGRY/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a lot of time to resolve. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing now is to focus on what you can do next. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix the issue and reassure them that it won't happen again. Emphasize the lessons you've learned and your commitment to being more careful in the future. With a calm, solutions-oriented approach, I think you can get through this. One step at a time. You've got ...
case-583	ANGRY/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a lot of time to fix. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The best thing to do now is to be upfront with your manager. Explain what happened calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have processes in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility. For now, take a deep breath. You got through the technical challenge, and that's ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-584	ANGRY/SUPPORTIVE_MENTOR/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Includes encouraging language appropriate to a supportive mentor. 4. Provides at least one concrete next step or action the user can take. 	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a lot of time to fix. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility. This is a minor setback - don't let it ...
case-585	ANGRY/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CURIOUS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this is a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be really stressful, especially when it takes a lot of time to fix. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes. The best thing is that you were able to recover the file. When you talk to your manager, focus on explaining what happened and the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have processes in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Stay calm and professional - you've got this.
case-586	ANGRY/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this is a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be really stressful, especially when it takes a lot of time to fix. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. The best thing is that you were able to recover the file. As for your manager, I'd suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve it, and focus on the positive that you were able to fix the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. The most important thing is that the problem is resolved now. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - just focus on moving forward.
case-587	ANGRY/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this is a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, even if it took some time. Here's what I suggest: First, document the steps you took to recover the file. This will show your manager that you took the right actions to resolve the issue. Explain that you learned from this experience and have implemented new safeguards to prevent it from happening again. When you speak to your manager, be upfront about what happened. Acknowledge the mistake, but also highlight the positive - that you were able to recover the file and learn from ...
case-588	ANGRY/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this is a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is stressful, and I can see why you're worried about how your manager will react. The most important thing is that you were able to recover the file, even if it took some time. Rather than dwelling on the mistake, I suggest focusing on what you learned from this experience and how you can prevent similar issues in the future. Is there a way you could improve your file backup process or be more careful with deletions going forward? I'm happy to brainstorm some ideas if that would be helpful. The key is to stay calm and proactive. Your manager will likely appreciate your taking responsibility and finding ...
case-589	ANGRY/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this is a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be really stressful, especially when it takes a lot of time to fix. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. The best thing is that you were able to recover the file. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you resolved the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. The important thing is that the problem was fixed. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - just focus on moving forward.
case-590	ANGRY/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this is a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is stressful, and it's understandable to feel embarrassed. However, the important thing now is to focus on resolving the issue. I suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened - explain the steps you took to fix it, and emphasize that you learned from the experience. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Going forward, consider implementing some safeguards to prevent similar mistakes. The main thing is to stay calm and address this professionally. You've got this.

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-591	ANGRY/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this is a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be really stressful, especially when it takes a lot of time to fix. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation clearly and take responsibility, but also highlight that you were able to resolve the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and your ability to fix the problem. Focus on the positive - that you were able to recover the file and get things back on track. With a clear, direct approach, this doesn't ...
case-592	ANGRY/CLEAR_DIRECT_COACH/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this is a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file, which is great. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue efficiently. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - just focus on the positive that you were able to fix the problem. With a clear, direct approach, I'm sure you can move ...
case-593	ANGRY/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/CURIOUS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is a common mistake, and it's understandable to feel embarrassed about it. The important thing is that you were able to fix it, even though it took time. I would suggest focusing on the positive - that you resolved the issue. When speaking to your manager, try to stay calm and explain what happened in a straightforward way. Emphasize that you were able to recover the file. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. This is a learning experience, and now you know to be extra careful with important files going forward. Try not to be too hard on yourself ...
case-594	ANGRY/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is a common mistake, and it's understandable to feel embarrassed about it. The important thing is that you were able to fix it, even though it took time. I would suggest focusing on the positive - that you resolved the issue. When speaking to your manager, be honest about what happened, but also emphasize that you were able to recover the file. Mistakes happen, and your manager will likely appreciate your transparency. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, and the main thing is that you were able to fix it. Let me know if you need any other suggestions for ...
case-595	ANGRY/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this").	I understand this is a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be stressful, but try not to be too hard on yourself. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. Here are a few suggestions that may help: First, document what happened - make a brief note about the incident and the steps you took to resolve it. This shows your manager you took it seriously and were proactive. Second, when you speak to your manager, focus on the solution rather than dwelling on the mistake. Explain what happened, what you did to fix it, and any steps you'll take to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and ...
case-596	ANGRY/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it is a difficult situation. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The most important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to fix it, and reassure them that it won't happen again. Chances are, they'll appreciate your honesty and responsibility in resolving the issue. Try to stay calm - your manager is likely more concerned with the outcome than placing blame. This is ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-597	ANGRY/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is a common mistake, and it's understandable to feel embarrassed about it. The important thing is that you were able to fix it, even though it took time. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue, and focus on the positive that you were able to recover the file. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, and the main thing is that you were able to fix it. Just focus on communicating clearly with your manager.
case-598	ANGRY/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this is a frustrating situation. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Mistakes happen, even with important work tasks. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, which shows your dedication. I would suggest focusing on the positive - that you resolved the problem efficiently. When speaking with your manager, be honest about what happened, but also highlight how you were able to address it. They'll likely appreciate your transparency and problem-solving skills. Try to stay calm and avoid dwelling on the mistake. You've got this.
case-599	ANGRY/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this is a frustrating situation. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. Mistakes happen, even with important work tasks. The important thing is that you were able to fix the issue, which shows your dedication. I would suggest focusing on the positive - that you resolved the problem efficiently. When speaking to your manager, be honest about what happened, but also emphasize the steps you took to address it. Approach the conversation calmly and professionally. Your manager will likely appreciate your proactive approach. Try not to dwell on the mistake itself. Stay grounded and focus on moving forward.
case-600	ANGRY/CALM_GROUNDING_GUIDE/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is a common mistake, and it's understandable to feel embarrassed about it. The important thing is that you were able to fix it, even if it took some time. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I suggest focusing on what you learned from this experience. Think about how you can be more careful with important files going forward. You could also consider proactively speaking to your manager about it, explaining what happened and what steps you've taken to prevent it in the future. Approaching it this way shows responsibility and a commitment to doing better. The main thing is not to be too ... case-601	ANGRY/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CURIOUS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a significant amount of time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. As for your manager, the best approach is to be upfront and honest about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue, and emphasize that you learned from the experience. Most managers will appreciate your transparency and responsibility in handling the situation. The key is to focus on the solution, not dwell on the mistake. With a calm, professional demeanor, you can get through ...
case-602	ANGRY/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be very frustrating for you. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it is a difficult situation. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - your manager is more concerned with the end result and how you responded to the problem. Moving forward, you ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-603	ANGRY/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be stressful, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, even to the most careful people. The best approach now is to be upfront with your manager. Explain what happened, the steps you took to fix it, and any measures you'll put in place to prevent it from happening again. Focusing on solutions rather than dwelling on the mistake itself will show your manager that you're taking responsibility and are committed to doing better going forward. With a clear plan, they're more likely to appreciate your proactive approach. In the future, consider implementing some ... case-604	ANGRY/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be very frustrating for you. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it is a difficult situation. I can see why you feel embarrassed about it. My advice would be to be upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue and reassure them that it won't happen again. Focus on the solution rather than dwelling on the mistake. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. Just be direct in communicating with your manager, and ... case-605	ANGRY/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a significant amount of time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have put measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility. The best thing you can do now is move forward productively. case-606	ANGRY/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue and the time it required. Focus on the positive - that you were able to recover the file and get it working again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. Going forward, you can look into ways to better safeguard important files to prevent ... case-607	ANGRY/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this is a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be stressful, especially when it takes time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the most careful people. The important thing is that you were able to fix it. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue and the time it required. Focus on the solution rather than dwelling on the mistake. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility in addressing the problem. With a calm, professional approach, this can be a learning experience rather than something to be overly concerned about. case-608	ANGRY/EXPERT_EXPLAINER/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, but it sounds like you were able to recover it, which is good. I know it can be worrying to think about how your manager might react, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. Moving forward, you could consider ways to be more careful with important files, like setting up automatic backups or being extra diligent about file management. But for now, try not to dwell on it too much. Focus on the fact that you resolved the issue, and be prepared to have an ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-609	ANGRY/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CURIOUS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is a common mistake, and I know it can feel embarrassing, especially if it took a lot of time to fix. My advice would be to be upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have steps in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. Let me know ...
case-610	ANGRY/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is a common mistake, and I know it can feel embarrassing, especially if it took a lot of time to fix. My advice would be to be upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and it won't happen again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, and the important thing is that you fixed it. Just focus on moving forward in a constructive way.
case-611	ANGRY/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this").	I understand this must be frustrating. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a significant amount of time to resolve. The best thing you can do now is to focus on the steps you took to fix the issue. Explain the situation clearly and factually to your manager, emphasizing the actions you took to resolve it efficiently. Avoid dwelling on feelings of embarrassment - your manager will likely appreciate your proactive approach. Moving forward, consider implementing a backup system or other safeguards to prevent similar incidents. The key is to address the practical concerns, not get caught up in self-criticism. Let me know if you need any other suggestions on how to handle this professionally.
case-612	ANGRY/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is a common mistake, and I know it can feel embarrassing, especially if it took a lot of time to fix. My advice would be to be upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have steps in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to fix it. Let me know ...
case-613	ANGRY/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a lot of time to fix. I know you're worried about what your manager will think, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager, explain what happened, and focus on the steps you took to resolve the issue. They'll likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. For now, try not to dwell on it too much. You got through the challenge, and that's what matters.
case-614	ANGRY/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really frustrating for you. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it is a tough situation. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. The best thing is that you were able to recover the file. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you resolved the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in addressing the problem. The important thing is that you learned from this experience and can be more careful going forward. Let me know if there's anything else I can do to help.

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-615	ANGRY/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be very frustrating for you. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it is a difficult situation. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. Rather than worrying about what your manager might think, I suggest focusing on what you learned from this experience. Think about how you can be more careful with important files going forward. You could also consider speaking proactively with your manager to explain what happened and the steps you've taken to prevent it in the future. Approaching it this way shows responsibility and a commitment ...
case-616	ANGRY/COLLABORATIVE_PARTNER/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really frustrating for you. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it is a tough situation. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. The best thing is that you were able to recover the file. I'm sure your manager will appreciate that you took the initiative to resolve the issue. Going forward, you could look into setting up automatic backups or version control to help prevent something like this from happening again. For now, focus on learning from this experience and don't dwell too much on the embarrassment. You've got this.
case-617	ANGRY/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIS T/CURIOUS_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a lot of time to fix. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes. The best thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve it. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty. Try not to dwell on it too much - learn from the experience and move forward. You've got this.
case-618	ANGRY/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIS T/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really frustrating for you. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it is a tough situation. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. The best thing is that you were able to recover the file. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you resolved the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in fixing the problem. This one incident doesn't define you or your work. Stay positive, and learn from this experience going forward.
case-619	ANGRY/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIS T/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this").	I understand this must be frustrating. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a lot of time to resolve. The best thing is to focus on addressing the issue at hand. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened - explain the situation clearly and focus on the steps you took to fix it. Emphasize that you learned from this experience and have measures in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility. Going forward, consider implementing some extra safeguards for important files to give you more peace of mind. The key is to address this professionally without dwelling on the embarrassment. I'm happy ...
case-620	ANGRY/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIS T/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a lot of time to fix. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes. The best thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve it. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty. Try not to dwell on it too much - learn from the experience and move forward. I'm sure it will be okay.
case-621	ANGRY/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIS T/FEARFUL_DISTRICTFUL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it is a difficult situation. I know you're worried about what your manager will think, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager, explain what happened, and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. They'll likely appreciate your honesty. In the meantime, try not to dwell on it too much. You got through it, and that's what matters.

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-622	ANGRY/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIS T/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really frustrating for you. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it is a tough situation. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. The best thing is that you were able to recover the file. As for your manager, I would suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you resolved the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in fixing the problem. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment - just focus on learning from this experience and moving forward.
case-623	ANGRY/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIS T/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a lot of time and effort to fix. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on how you were able to resolve the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. Try not to dwell on the mistake - learn from it and move forward. You've got this.
case-624	ANGRY/FRIENDLY_CONVERSATIONALIS T/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint).	I understand this must be really frustrating for you. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it is a tough situation. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes, even to the best of us. The important thing is that you were able to recover the file. I wouldn't worry too much about what your manager will think. If you're upfront about what happened and how you resolved it, they'll likely appreciate your honesty and diligence in fixing the issue. Focus on learning from this experience so you can be more careful with important files going forward. With a little time, this will blow over. Just keep doing great work, and ...
case-625	ANGRY/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/CURIO US_OPEN	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step.	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. As an analytical data-driven professional, here's my perspective: The most important thing now is to focus on resolving the issue and preventing it from happening again. I would suggest documenting exactly what happened, the steps you took to fix it, and any lessons learned. That way, you can proactively present the information to your manager in a clear, factual way. Moving forward, consider implementing some process improvements, like setting up automated backups or version control, to minimize the risk of data loss. I'm happy to discuss specific technical solutions that could help. The key is to stay calm, take ownership, and demonstrate your commitment to preventing similar issues in the future. Your ... case-626	ANGRY/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/EXCIT ED_OPTIMISTIC	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step.	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. As an analytical data-driven professional, here's my perspective: The most important thing now is to focus on resolving the issue. I would suggest documenting the steps you took to recover the file, including the time it took. That way, you can proactively explain the situation to your manager and demonstrate the diligence you applied to fix the problem. Going forward, I recommend reviewing your file backup and recovery processes to identify any areas for improvement. Implementing more robust safeguards could help prevent similar incidents in the future. I'm happy to provide some suggestions on best practices for data management if that would be helpful. The key is to remain calm, take a ... case-627	ANGRY/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/CAUTI OUS_SKEPTICAL	1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 4. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this").	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file can be stressful, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. From a practical standpoint, the best approach is to have an open and honest conversation with your manager. Explain what happened, the steps you took to fix it, and any measures you've put in place to prevent similar issues in the future. Focus on demonstrating your problem-solving skills and commitment to your work. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency. Many people make honest mistakes, and how you handle the situation is often more important than the mistake itself. Approach the conversation calmly and professionally. Avoid dwelling on feelings of embarrassment, as that may come across ...

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-628	ANGRY/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/CONCERNED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating and stressful situation. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes significant time to resolve. However, try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen, and the important thing is that you were able to recover the file. Moving forward, I would suggest documenting what happened and the steps you took to fix it. That way, if your manager has any questions, you can provide a clear, factual account. I also recommend speaking to your manager proactively to explain the situation. Approach it calmly and focus on the resolution, rather than dwelling on the mistake. With a level-headed, solutions-oriented attitude, your manager is more likely to appreciate ...
case-629	ANGRY/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/FEARFUL_DISTRUSTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. As an analytical data-driven professional, here's my perspective: The most important thing now is to focus on resolving the issue. I would suggest documenting the steps you took to recover the file, so you can explain the process to your manager. Emphasize that you were able to successfully restore the file, even if it took some time. When speaking to your manager, maintain a calm, factual tone. Acknowledge the mistake, but also highlight the actions you took to fix it. Propose any process improvements that could prevent similar issues in the future. This demonstrates your professionalism and commitment to doing your job well. The key is to address this in a constructive ... case-630	ANGRY/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it can be very stressful. However, the best thing to do now is to focus on the practical next steps. I would suggest being proactive and having a calm, factual conversation with your manager about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve the issue and what you've learned to prevent it from happening again in the future. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility in addressing the problem. Going forward, consider implementing some additional safeguards, like regularly backing up critical files or using version control software. That can help minimize the risk of data loss in the ... case-631	ANGRY/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. As an analytical data-driven professional, here's my perspective: The most important thing now is to focus on resolving the issue and preventing it from happening again. I would suggest documenting exactly what happened, the steps you took to fix it, and any lessons learned. That way, you can proactively present the information to your manager in a clear, factual way. Moving forward, consider implementing some process improvements, like setting up automated backups or version control, to minimize the risk of data loss. I'm happy to provide some recommendations on tools or workflows that could help. The key is to stay calm, take ownership, and demonstrate your commitment to doing better going forward. ...
case-632	ANGRY/DATA_DRIVEN_ANALYST/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Is structured/analytical (e.g., steps/numbering) OR provides a concrete next step. 	I understand this must be a frustrating situation. As a data-driven analyst, let me provide a practical perspective. The important thing now is to focus on the steps forward. I suggest: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Proactively communicate with your manager. Explain what happened, how you resolved it, and the measures you'll take to prevent this in the future. Emphasize your commitment to your work. 2. Document the issue and your resolution steps. This shows you took ownership and can help provide context if needed. 3. Consider implementing a more robust backup or version control system to mitigate data loss risks going forward. I'm happy to provide some recommendations on tools that could help. The key is to stay calm, take responsibility, and demonstrate ...
case-633	ANGRY/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/CURIOUS_OPEN	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a lot of time to fix. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes. The best thing is that you were able to recover the file. When you talk to your manager, focus on what you learned and how you'll be more careful going forward. I'm sure they'll appreciate your honesty and responsibility in fixing the issue. Just stay calm and professional. You've got this.

Test ID	Specific Filters being tested	Expected LLM Result	Actual LLM Result
case-634	ANGRY/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/EXCITED_OPTIMISTIC	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be really frustrating for you. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it is a tough situation. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. The best thing is that you were able to recover the file. As for your manager, I'd suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve it, and focus on the positive that you were able to fix the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. This doesn't have to be a big deal, so try not to stress too much. You've got this.
case-635	ANGRY/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/CAUTIOUS_SKEPTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 3. Does not use generic reassurance phrases (e.g., "it's okay", "everyone makes mistakes", "you've got this"). 	I understand this must be frustrating. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes time to resolve. The best thing is to focus on addressing the issue efficiently. I'd suggest documenting the steps you took to recover the file, so you can explain the process to your manager if needed. Emphasize the actions you took to resolve it quickly. Your manager will likely appreciate your proactive approach. Going forward, consider implementing some safeguards, like regular backups, to prevent similar issues. The important thing is that you were able to fix it. Try not to dwell on the mistake - learn from it and move forward.
case-636	ANGRY/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/CONFUSED_OVERWHELMED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be really frustrating and upsetting. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a lot of time to fix. It's understandable to feel embarrassed, but try not to be too hard on yourself. These things happen sometimes. The best thing is that you were able to recover the file. When you talk to your manager, focus on what you learned and how you'll be more careful going forward. I'm sure they'll appreciate your honesty and responsibility in fixing the issue. Just stay calm and professional. You've got this.
case-637	ANGRY/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/FEARFUL_DISTRICTFUL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be really frustrating for you. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it is a tough situation. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. The best thing is that you were able to recover the file. As for your manager, I'd suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve it, and focus on the positive that you were able to fix the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. This is a learning experience, and I'm sure you'll be more careful going forward. Just stay calm and focus on the solution, not the mistake.
case-638	ANGRY/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/NEUTRAL_UNDECIDED	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be really frustrating for you. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it is a tough situation. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. The best thing is that you were able to recover the file. As for your manager, I'd suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve it, and focus on the positive that you were able to fix the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. This doesn't have to be a big deal, so try not to stress too much. Just be straightforward, and I'm sure it will work out.
case-639	ANGRY/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/CRITICAL_ANALYTICAL	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be really frustrating for you. Accidentally deleting an important file and having to spend hours fixing it is a tough situation. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. The best thing is that you were able to recover the file. As for your manager, I'd suggest being upfront about what happened. Explain the steps you took to resolve it, and focus on the positive that you were able to fix the issue. Your manager will likely appreciate your honesty and responsibility in handling it. This doesn't have to be a big deal, so try not to stress too much. You've got this.
case-640	ANGRY/CREATIVE_BRAINSTORMER/ENTHUSIASTIC_BUILDER	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Non-empty assistant_response. 2. Word count <= 350 (NO_INFO_DUMP constraint). 	I understand this must be really frustrating and stressful. Accidentally deleting an important file is never easy, especially when it takes a lot of time to resolve. Try not to be too hard on yourself - these things happen sometimes. The best thing is that you were able to fix it. I would suggest being upfront with your manager about what happened. Explain the situation calmly and focus on the steps you took to resolve it. Emphasize that you learned from the experience and have processes in place to prevent it from happening again. Your manager will likely appreciate your transparency and responsibility. This is an opportunity to demonstrate your problem-solving skills. Try not to dwell on the embarrassment. Learn ...